purpose of offsetting the moves made to align exhibitors against theater owning producers and distributors.

The Independent group headed by Frank Rembusch claim to be unable to negotiate a dependable agreement in writing with the Theater Owners' executives and claim that the Theater Owners' organization want to use a national organization for their own uses—the promotion of some kind of an advertising plan. This is denied by executives of the Theater Owners group, who contend that in calling a meeting for Cleveland Rembusch has acted personally without calling on the special committee of 17.

This is sure, however, that there is going to be a big crowd of exhibitors in Cleveland—and a real battle. Officials of the Theater Owners' organization say there will be 1,500 exhibitors attending their convention alone.

Stories dealing with Spanish life and customs will be filmed. The pictures are designed primarily for distribution in Spanish-speaking countries, but will be shown here as well.

Minter Action Up

Trial Under Way in Los Angeles—Counter Claim by American

Los Angeles—With a court room thronged with a number of film celebrities the suit of Mary Miles Minter, now Realart star, against the American Film Co. for alleged breach of contract was brought to trial in Judge Trippet's court.

Miss Minter claims that American Film owes her approximately $5,000 for back pay. American, in turn, has brought a counterclaim against Miss Minter for $100,000 damages, alleging that amount of loss through the star's alleged failure to appear in a picture selected for her.

Mrs. Gertrude Shelby, mother of Miss Minter, says that the latter's absence from the studios at various times was because of a toothache.

In the complaint, Miss Minter states that her salary was $2,250 a week, but that there were times when she received only half of this amount. Apparently the star's age will be an important factor in the trial, since she claims she was under 18 when she signed the contract.

Starting Something

changes in the organization. The chief reason for this is said to be a desire for more vigorous work from the body, and a more determined effort to have a stronger body of exhibitor members. Those who are in sympathy with this idea declare that the membership of exhibitors in the Association is "a joke."

Several names of probable candidates for the presidency are being discussed. Those interested in the idea say that while a splendid executive Wm. A. Brady is so occupied with other affairs that he cannot give the necessary time to a vigorous prosecution of the office. It will be recalled that Brady resigned from the presidency last year and was only prevailed upon to reconsider after considerable discussion.

Norman H. Moray, local Republic manager, has tendered his resignation. His successor has not as yet been named.

Allens Claim

First National Subfranchises for Canadian Houses

In a publicity story issued by Jule and J. J. Allen in Toronto last week, announcement was made that a deal had been closed with First National in New York whereby every Allen theater in Canada has secured a 25-year subfranchise for the exclusive showing of the Associated First National productions.

The only house excepted on the Allen circuit is in Ottawa, on account of the fact that Harry Brouse, Eastern Canadian franchise holder of First National, has a couple of theaters in the latter city.

The Allens have controlled the distribution of First National in Western Canada for the past year, but the eastern franchise is controlled by Harry Brouse, who uses the Regal Films as his distributors.

At First National no information was obtainable regarding the above report.

Goldstein Promoted

E. H. Goldstein, until now general sales manager at Universal, has been made secretary to Carl Laemmle. Goldstein's successor has not been picked.

Gloria Swanson arrived in New York yesterday with her husband, Herbert K. Somborn, president of Equity Pictures. They are stopping at the Biltmore.

Company Understood to Have Been Perfected on Coast

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—John G. Hawkes, John Lynch, C. Gardner Sullivan and Monte Katterjohn are understood to have formed a producing company of their own in which a former official of Mayflower Photoplay Corp. is said to be the financial backer.

The four men mentioned above are all well known screen writers and continuity men. Hawkes has written a number of stories for William S. Hart; Sullivan is at present scenario chief for Thomas H. Ince; Lynch is in like capacity with Selznick and Monte Katterjohn was last announced as doing a special series for Harry Garson. All of them were at one time on the scenario staff of the Thomas Ince organization.

Hawkes was the only one who could be reached for a statement. He said he preferred not to discuss the matter at this time.

Ed'c't'l Gets Christie

Makes Fourth Series of Comedies for Hammons' Company

Educational Films Corp. will hereafter release all two-reel Christie comedies, a contract having just been signed by E. W. Hamons and Chas. H. Christie. Educational will control the entire rights for the United States and Canada, distributing through its own exchange system.

There will be one release every two weeks. The contract does not apply to the old product and this will continue to be booked as at present.

Educational already has the Chester, Torchy and Mermaid series.

Sheehan Returns

Winfield R. Sheehan of Fox Film returned yesterday from Europe but was closeted with William Fox late in the afternoon.

Sheehan is expected to make a number of announcements during the convention which opens on Monday morning.

Harron, Metro Star

Deal Understood to Be Closed—Will Make Four a Year With Chet Withey Directing

Following closely on the heels of the announcement that Lillian Gish had left the Griffith organization comes a well authenticated report that Robert Harron, long a Griffith player, had formed his own organization and will make four productions a year for Metro release.

The pictures will be made at the Griffith studios in Mamaroneck and will be directed by Chet Withey. June Walker, now appearing in "My Lady's Friends," will support Harron in his first production. D. W. Griffith, it is understood, will supervise the productions.

Another Star

Richard Barthelmess, another member of the Griffith organization, will become a star in the fall, according to present plans.

It is understood that the same plan will be adopted in his case as is being done with Robert Harron, that is, an individual producing unit with Barthelmess as the star.

Eve Unsell Coming Home

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London, Eng.—Eve Unsell, who came here last August to organize the scenario department of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., intends returning to America at the conclusion of her present contract.

She stated that there have been many offers made to her while here. One of them offered her the opportunity of dividing her time between the two countries. This offer came from a new organization which will be backed by powerful financial interests of England, France and America, who intend to operate studios in the three countries. She refused to divulge the names of the men interested in the venture.

Miss Unsell has been widely quoted in the English press on her views on scenario construction and story production for the screen.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Canton, O.—Original exploitation stunts are none too plentiful, but when the Allan Dwan production, "The Luck of the Irish," was slated to open at the Alhambra, a trick that brought enormous business to the house as a result of the unusual amount of newspaper publicity and word of mouth advertising was worked. At about 4 o'clock one afternoon a man and woman were seen struggling furiously on the roof of a high building. Every passer-by naturally looked up. The duo up above swayed towards the ledge and a series of screams was audible. For a moment they disappeared from view but approached once more. After some more circus swaying, the woman was thrown down and hit the street with a thud. Of course it was a dummy, but those who watched it experienced a thrill of the type that comes about once in a lifetime, and upon coming close discovered a sign attached to the figure reading, "Don't miss 'The Luck of the Irish' at the Alhambra. A beauty contest, run in conjunction with this, and much newspaper advertising, also did its bit.

Charles Scribner's Sons have decided to issue a special motion picture edition of "Simple Souls," written by John Hastings. A special jacket with a scene from the film on the front cover. It will be the ninth edition of the story and should help in the exploitation of Pathe's production starring Blanche Sweet.

Phoenix, Ariz.—A red ink announcement of Pauline Frederick's appearance in "The Woman in Room 13" at the Columbia, on the first page of the Republican, helped considerably in the exploitation of that production. Five hundred copies were purchased and distributed in hotels and other places where prospective patrons were likely to be found.

Tacoma, Wash.—When Manager David of the Liberty booked "The Whirlwind," he faced considerable opposition as rival exhibitors were conducting their own exploitation campaigns. By effecting an arrangement whereby Boy Scouts sold tickets on a percentage basis he got off to a good start. After that, he had windows stencilled by white card paint and an agreement with the street car company made it possible to place signs on the fenders of cars. Motorcycles figuring prominently in the serial, an arrangement was made with the Excelsior Motorcycle Co. whereby that organization had three riding about on the "wheels" with signs on their backs to the effect that Excelsior cycles were used exclusively in the production.

contract, said Mr. Lasky, calls for a series of Gloria Swanson Prod. to be supervised by Cecil De Mille. These, said Lasky, are to be the only productions with the exception of his own that De Mille will personally supervise.

Lasky further asserted that he was in receipt of a telegram from Miss Swanson in which he says she states that she intends returning to the studio as soon as her health warrants it.

Herbert K. Somborn, president of Equity Pictures, who is now in New York with Gloria Swanson, who is his wife in private life, stated yesterday that he always thought himself a pretty good reader and that Miss Swanson's present contract with Jesse Lasky expires Dec. 31, 1920.

He stated that talk of her own organization was premature and that nothing had been done about the matter. The Somborns wil be here for about four days and then return to the coast.

Asks $30,000 Damages

Los Angeles—Because of Helen Holmes' alleged temperamental disposition, Harry M. Warner has instituted suit for $30,000 damages.

Warner alleges in his complaint that the serial for which Miss Holmes was engaged cost him about $50,000 more than it should have cost because of Miss Holmes alleged whims.

Warner says she usually took three hours for lunch every day and had a habit of arriving at the studio several hours late while the rest of the company awited her arrival.

At one time, Warner charges, Miss Holmes threatened to leave him unless he advanced her $5,000.

What They Think

Independent Producers Go on Record on Exhibiting Question

Various independent producers and stars releasing through First National have authorized statements in which their attitude on the ownership of theaters is clearly defined.

The original statements will be available to the Independent M. P. Exhibitors of America and any other independent group of theater owners.

Charles Ray says in part:

"I do not believe that producer-ownership of theaters is healthy for the stars or other production sources it controls, or for the industry at large. Big manufacturing and producing organizations in other industries have learned this through experience. We do not find big clothing manufacturers operating their own retail establishments."

The following sums the attitude of the Katherine MacDonald Corp.:

"Producer-ownership of picture theaters is essentially unjust to the thousands of exhibitors whose years of support have made possible the splendid photoplays that are now being produced."

Louis B. Mayer thinks this:

"The producer should be satisfied with his profit on production and should not try to freeze or browbeat the theater owner out of his holdings or his profits on exhibiting. Live and let live."

Marshall Neilan says in part:

"The theater-buying epidemic resulting in the producer-owned houses throughout the country has reached a stage where it should offer serious concern for every independent exhibitor in this country regardless of the size of his holdings or community. Producers have won their independence. Exhibitors must do likewise if they wish to realize the best returns on their investment."

Here are Allan Dwan's thoughts:

"The independent exhibitor is now faced with a serious problem. Forces are at work seeking to dominate the industry to encroach on and even usurp the exhibitor's legitimate field of operation.

"Any movement calculated to seek control of the exhibition field strikes at the very cornerstone of the showman's business.

"The exhibitor's only salvation in this crisis is a steadfast adherence to the policy of independence."

King W. Vidor is very emphatic in his statements. He says:

"The time has come to sever diplomatic relations. Hand the 'trust' film salesman his passports and send him back to the enemy country. It is war to the knife.

"Ponder this grave problem, Mr. Exhibitor are you going to work FOR the trust, or WITH the independent producer? Are you going to be a chattel or a free born American? Sound the tocsin! Draw the sword! On to war."

Increase Hodkinson Sales Force

The Hodkinson sales force has been increased by 50 per cent and it is planned by that company to conduct a summer campaign on a large scale.

Sells Canadian Rights

C. B. Price has sold the Canadian rights to "His Pajama Girl" to the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange.

In the Courts

Oliver Morosco has been sued in the Supreme Court by his wife, Mrs. Annie M. Morosco, for an accounting of the receipts from the film rights of "Peg O' My Heart." She alleges that she owned the sole rights to the play and that in October, 1918, she revoked her husband's agency of her rights in the play. In spite of that fact, she says he sold the film rights for his own benefit to Famous-Players-Lasky and got an advance of $50,000 and is alleged to have received a total of more than $250,000. She alleges that he has squandered a large part of what he received.

Five judgments for money lent have been filed in the City Court against Harry Schiffman of the Strand Theater building, in behalf of the Fleischman-Smith Corp. The judgments are for $2,025, $1,874, $1,518, $1,012 and $1,923.

Harry Fields has sued Henry W. Savage, Inc., in the Supreme Court for $24,000 damages. He alleges that the defendant sold him the Canadian rights to "Madame X" for $21,000, and thereafter refused to carry out the agreement, but sold the rights to another party for $45,000, causing him the damage sued for.

A judgment for $5,000 has been filed in the Supreme Court against Samuel H. London in behalf of Mrs. Nettie Hechter, whose husband conducted a restaurant at 76 2nd Ave. The plaintiff sued for $100,000 on the ground that the defendant produced the film, "The Inside of the White Slave Traffic," and made it appear that her husband's restaurant was the headquarters of the traffic. She said that the film showed pictures of the restaurant in some of which she appeared.

Building Standardized Theaters

The following letter has just been received from Tom Moore of Moore's Theater, Washington, D. C.:

"I have had several conferences on the question of constructing theaters on a standardized scale with a concern that made me a proposition of a radical departure from the old plan, representing a wonderful saving in construction and in time consumed to build theaters. For instance, I expect to close for the erection of several theaters in this city, the first one to be the Parkway, located at 14th and Park Road, which will have an area of 100 ft. width by 160 ft dtpth, guaranteed to be erected in 73 working days. Another theater 80 ft. wide by 120 ft. erected in 40 working days. I expect to reach a conclusion of conferences with this concern that will be glad to ship the whole of material to any point, with the price absolutely set and guaranteed and the time of construction also set and guaranteed. Theaters may be constructed to seat 1,000 people in 30 working days; theaters seating 2,000 people in 60 days or less; and so on.

"I believe this movement will relieve all concerned as to the jumping of prices after a contract is let, since time of erection and price for same will be guaranteed by a building concern of substantial standing and financial resources. Therefore, I would respectfully request that you give it space in your columns as constructive news. The name of the concern and other details as to price, etc., will follow if all ends of the plan work out O. K., which I am at this time reasonably certain of.

"Yours truly,

"TOM MOORE."

Unusual Love Story With No Physical Action But Carrying Deep Appeal

Doris Keane in
"ROMANCE"
United Artists

DIRECTOR.....Chet Withey
AUTHOR.....Edward Sheldon
SCENARIO BY.....Wells Hastings
CAMERAMAN .....Louis Bitzer
AS A WHOLE.....Very unusual; all a romance with hardly any action, yet always interests and sometimes grips.
STORY.....For the most part a succession of scenes between lovers; builds well and entertains.
DIRECTION.....Has handled material appreciatively and builds up good degree of interest.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Very good
LIGHTINGS.....Very effective
CAMERA WORK.....Excellent
STAR.....Screens pleasingly and puts wonderful feeling into rôle.
SUPPORT.....Basil Sydney gives fine performance opposite.
EXTERIORS.....Suitable; few used
INTERIORS.....In excellent taste
DETAIL.....Sub-titles excellently chosen from play; are impressive and full of feeling.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Unfulfilled romance of opera singer and minister.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....7,000 feet

Those familiar with "Romance," the play, need hardly be reminded that it presented a trying subject for the picture producer to visualize. Pure romance (as a play it was largely dialogue), it contained no physical action, the easiest of all varieties of action to screen. Thus the photoplay material narrowed down to a straight succession of romantic scenes between Rita Cavallini, the opera singer, and Tom Armstrong, the minister.

To properly present these scenes and to present them so as to command the interest and to stir the emotion of the spectator, was a job big enough to test the ability of the most skilful director. It is therefore a pleasure to record that "Romance" has received the most appreciative sort of treatment from Director Chet Withey, who adhered closely to the lines laid down by the original play.

It is true that much of the credit must go to Doris Keane, who assumes her original rôle of the opera singer and who screens very pleasingly, and also to Basil Sydney, whose emotional work as the minister is outstanding. Without their performances, ringing with sincerity in every scene, Withey might well have been at a loss. But with them and by his own sympathetic treatment of the subject an unusually captivating romance is the result.

The plot is merely the story told by Bishop Armstrong to his grandson who seeks his advice on a matter of marriage. The Bishop relates of his own youthful romance with Cavallini, an opera star. His great love for her which, however, was always with odds with his doubt of her morality, his fierce standing off of her alluring charm, his moment's weakening and his final realization that they must part to save themselves. These are elements that combine to make a romance of the simplest, yet deepest appeal.

Miss Keane's is an unusual and fetching personality which she brings to the screen in this rôle with which she is so thoroughly familiar. Sydney is at all times effective, while Norman Trevor as Van Tuyl is very well cast. Others are Betty Ross Clarke, Amelia Summerville, A. J. Herbert, Gilda Varesi, John Davidson, June Eileen Terry, Arthur Rankin and Vangie Valentine.

Should Appeal Specially To The Better Class Of Audience

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is no doubt about the drawing power of "Romance," particularly in metropolitan quarters. It will bring out people that seldom come to the picture houses. The older ones, many of whom saw the original play when presented here something over six years ago, and those who are familiar with the tragic yet beautiful character of the romance presented, will turn out en masse to see the picture.

It is this class of people, together with the more intelligent of your regulars, to whom "Romance" will make its biggest appeal. Probably some fans will find fault with it because there is scarcely any physical action, but not very many, for the reason that the many impassioned scenes between the two leading characters contain an almost limitless appeal.

In billing it lay stress on the fact that Doris Keane has her original rôle, and also mention that the play has been going steadily ever since it was first produced. Make a big thing out of it when you do show it, and be sure to take pains to bring it before the attention of the best elements in your neighborhood.

Fine Acting And Characterization In This

"THE SEA WOLF"
Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... George Melford
AUTHOR ..... Jack London
SCENARIO BY ..... Will M. Richey
CAMERAMAN ..... Paul Perry
AS A WHOLE.....A gripping and thoroughly appreciative realization of London's great book
STORY.....Powerful and practical; rings true
DIRECTION.....Has injected the spirit of the author's story and maintained a fine sea atmosphere.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Fine
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
PLAYERS.....Noah Beery splendid in title role, Mabel Julienne Scott and Tom Forman do well, others well chosen.
EXTERIORS....Practically all on deck of schooner
INTERIORS.....Cabin scenes mostly DETAIL .....Careful attention
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Theory of "The Wolf" whose creed was "Might is Right."
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,097 feet

It is "The Sea Wolf" and his creed of "might is right" that Director Melford has visualized in his production of Jack London's famous story. The entire force of the picture and its biggest thrills and practically every gripping moment comes through the character of "The Sea Wolf"—his actions, his words as found in the titles and his very look. For this reason George Melford's production deserves praise inasmuch as it does not depend on the spectacular to put it over.

This well known sea story was filmed several years ago and the collision of the schooner "Ghost" with a ferryboat was about the biggest feature of the production and throughout the picture the spectacular held sway. Not so in the Melford production. The disaster is shown in practically only two shots, one when "The Ghost" jams into the ferryboat with a shot from the interior of the ferry and another showing passengers jumping into the water. Inasmuch as thrills of a spectacular sort are not relied upon to hold the audience, this latest "Sea Wolf" deserves considerable credit.

It is more a character drawing than anything else. Once the characters are gathered together aboard "The Ghost," the author sets about to prove his point by the process of elimination, for at the close the only remaining members are the girl and her sweetheart. Noah Beery as "The Wolf" gives probably one of the best performances of his career, while Tom Forman and Mabel Julienne Scott handle the next most important roles in a highly satisfactory manner.

Maude Brewster refuses to marry Humphrey Van Weyden because he doesn't measure up to her standard of a man. She wants a red-blooded, powerful man and she believes Humphrey a weakling. While the two are on a ferry in San Francisco Bay the boat is wrecked and Maude and Humphrey are later picked up by Wolf Larsen and taken aboard his schooner, "The Ghost."

They beg to be sent ashore but the Wolf is shorthanded and makes a cabin boy of Humphrey. While the schooner sails north on its sealing expedition, Wolf Larsen rules the crew of "The Ghost" with a violent hand and much footage is consumed in showing his various "clean-ups." When the boat is nearing its destination the Wolf attacks Maude but is seized by one of his terrific headaches to which he is subject as a result of a fight.

Maude and Humphrey escape in a small boat and reach a deserted islnd. Some time later "The Ghost" drifts in, apparently deserted. They go aboard and find "The Wolf" alone and blind. With the faint spark of fight still remaining he attempts to choke Humphrey but is seized by another headache and dies. The man and girl are later picked up by a revenue cutter.

Emphasize That It Is An Entirely New Production

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

While there is not as much of the spectacular as they will probably expect to find in "The Sea Wolf" there are sufficient thrills in violence of Wolf Larsen and his various outbursts of rage in his domineering and unrestricted command of the schooner, "The Ghost." For those who may like tales of the sea and are not acquainted with Jack London's famous book, if there are any such, dress up your lobby with stills. If properly exploited your receipts should justify the expense involved.

Be sure to say that this is a new production of London's story in order that folks will not think it is a reissue. Although no one is credited as star in the picture, Noah Beery certainly deserves stellar prominence and his name should be used in connection with stills showing him in the character of "The Sea Wolf." Use the line: "Don't fail to see the new production of Jack London's famous 'The Sea Wolf,' a story of 'Might is Right,' as practiced by the Captain of the schooner, 'Ghost.'"

Plot And Idea Have Been Lost By This Comedy

Taylor Holmes in
"NOTHING BUT LIES"
Taylor Holmes Prod.-Metro

DIRECTOR .....Lawrence Windom
AUTHOR .....Aaron Hoffman
SCENARIO BY.....S. E. V. Taylor
CAMERAMAN .....Jacob Badaracco
AS A WHOLE.....Too much attention paid to trivialities and not enough to plot; interest slack.
STORY.....The original play had some good comedy situations but they've missed most of them here.
DIRECTION.....Didn't realize plot's possibilities
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fair
LIGHTINGS ..... Average
CAMERA WORK .....Average
STAR.....Works hard and gets some laughs over by own business.
SUPPORT.....Capable also but the situations aren't there to help them.
EXTERIORS .....Few used
INTERIORS .....Quite plain
DETAIL....Altogether too many exits and entrances
CHARACTER OF STORY....Deals with the havoc and good caused by pamphlet telling of the lies in advertising business.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,600 feet

While 'Nothing But Lies" was nowhere nearly as successful on the stage as "Nothing But the Truth" and in fact merely traded on the reputation of its companion piece, it must be conceded that it had the germ of an idea in it, said germ being very well developed by Aaron Hoffman, who knows the technique of comedy from a to z and back again.

But somebody missed during the transfer of the plot to the screen. It may have been Taylor or Wnidom, or both. But something certainly happened because the plot and its moral and whatnot have all vanished. This seems something of a broad statement to make, but it really is a fact. The scenes present no coherent plot. They are jumbled and some of the best situations of the play have been altogether omitted and the action that does appear relies altogether on the personal ability of each player and the business he can create to get laughs.

George Cross of an advertising agency is the central character. Ann Nigh, daughter of his partner, wants to know whether lies are necessary in business the way her brother Allan says they are. He tells her no, and that he had never told anything but the truth in his life.

During the night George goes to the office to get a plate for a newspaper and there surprises Allan, who has been distributing a leaflet exposing the lies in the advertising of the firm. Rosie, a member of the "Truth Society" to which Allan belongs, is hiding in the next office. George sends Allan to the newspaper office with the plate and then discovers Rosie. He in turn is discovered with her by Nigh and Ann. And George has to lie out of the situation.

The possibilities of this mixup are not well realized at all. They could have built it up very well had their comedy wits been about, but the threads of the plot are lost and seem to stay pretty well lost thereafter. There is a scramble to find out who printed the leaflet and a detective who isn't a detective after all but a customer of the advertising firm's is introduced into the action, ocuupying considerably more space than is awarded the plot. All in all they get pretty well messed up and forget the story altogether.

Taylor Holmes is sincere in his offorts to coax laughter and sometimes he succeeds through his own trick and business, but he needs comedy situation to back him up. The same may be said of Dodson Mitchell and Rapley Holmes, naturally two capable players. Justine Johnstone, Gipsey O'Brien, Ann Wallack, Jack McGowan and John Junior complete the cast.

Most Audiences Will Note The Deficiencies Of This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There isn't much chance of this registering very satisfactorily with your audiences, especially if you have shown them some of the recent feature comedies on the market that reach an average standard. The idea at the bottom of the original play was all right, but somebody certainly muffed it somewhere during the play's transfer to the celluloid and the results are as related above.

If you speeded the picture along you might possibly get by with it as the comedy between Holmes and Mitchell in the last two reels, though not made substantial through situations, registers fairly well because of their work.

Of course if you want to play this because of the advertising that "Nothing But the Truth" may have given it, the best way to go about it is to herald it as a companion piece to the former and let it go at that.

"THE DARK MIRROR"

Thos. H. Ince-Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR .....Charles Giblyn
AUTHOR.....Louis Joseph Vance
SCENARIO BY.....E. Magnus Ingleton
CAMERAMAN.....John S. Stumar
AS A WHOLE....Holds interest through unusualness, but hardly convinces.
STORY....Dual role story resembling "The Corsican Brothers" in theme.
DIRECTION .....Satisfactory
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Very good
LIGHTINGS....Effective; specially in rain storm sequence.
CAMERA WORK .....Very good
STAR.....Plays with good effect in dual role
EXTERIORS .....Well chosen
INTERIORS .....Same
DETAIL .....All right
CHARACTER OF STORY....Deals with twin sisters; one subconsciously feels what is happening to the other.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,084 feet

Because of its unusualness and its slight touching upon the science of psycho analysis, "The Dark Mirror" commands a certain amount of attention that is not to be denied. When it comes to convincing quality, there will be another tale to tell as regards the majority of picture audiences. "The Dark Mirror" reaches the limits as far as the dual role is concerned. It utilizes the theme of Dumas' "The Corsican Brothers," in which, it will be remembered, one of the twins always knew when the other was facing danger through some peculiar transmission of thought.

In this picture there are Priscilla Maine and Nora O'Moore, both played by Dorothy Dalton. Priscilla is rich, and everyone thinks she should be happy, but in her subconscious mind there is usually trouble. On particular occasions these subconscious thoughts become very vivid indeed, and she is able to visualize episodes that are occurring in Nora's life.

Nora is a member of a gang of crooks, but anxious to break away and lead a life of romance with Mario. At length she does. They are married and take up residence in a New Jersey suburb. One day, Red Carnahan, the gang leader, surprises her and kills her. All this Priscilla goes through in her mind.

Later, another member of the gang mistakes her for Nora. She is captured, but rescued by Mario, who also believes her Nora. He takes her back to his home where the real truth is out. Mario departs a broken man, and Priscilla goes to the arms of Dr. Fosdick, who has always loved her.

The picture is a peculiar combination. It combines its science with very wild melodrama. For this reason, both of the elements have a pretty hard time registering effectively. And again any student of psycho analysis will tell you that the subconscious thoughts of an individual are never as clear and definite in their impress as those that beset Priscilla.

Dorothy Dalton plays the twin role of Priscilla and Nora with good effect, although she doesn't differentiate much between her two characters. Appearing in her support are Hentley Gordon, Pedro de Cordoba, Walter Neeland, Jessie Arnold, Lucile Carney, Donald McPherson and Bert Starkey.

The production given the picture is thoroughly adequate. Special mention should be made of the rainstorm sequence which is particularly well done.

Play It As A Straight Melodrama

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As a melodramatic picture of strange adventure, "The Dark Mirror" will probably register satisfactorily before audiences easily swayed to emotion. And it is really best to consider the picture as melodrama, pure and simple. If the peculiar dual role stuff, with its touching on a strange science, is taken at all seriously, there immediately appear a few dozen flaws in the melodramatic texture of the story. Taken as pure pictorial fiction, the picture is interesting.

Catch lines might be written on the following order: "Do you believe that an invisible bond exists between twins? See 'The Dark Mirror,'" "An adventure story concerning two women who looked exactly alike but who lived in totally different spheres," "Way back in Priscilla's mind she clearly visualized what was happening to her twin, Nora! A story of adventure and romance, so weird it will hold you." You have two very good advertising assets in author and star.

STAR.....Gives the impression that she is very conscious that she's acting.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....A little bit of everything and not much of anything.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

The director no doubt knew he was going to make a picture, but what it was going to be about certainly didn't worry him very much, and folks who see "The Honey Bee" are going to wonder what it's really all about. The book by Samuel Merwin may have provided good reading matter, but its contents are too varied and its theme too full of gaps that may be overlooked in the reading, but certainly are noticeable in a picture. And it is this fault that the director has not overcome. He has not connected the sequences so that they link in with what follows.

For instance, the opening reel deals with a collector of antiques whom the titles say does not get along well with his wife, although the only indication of friction is when the wife enters his office and finds the husband standing next to his secretary with his hand on her shoulder, but she tells him "she will never divorce him." Without making clear to the audience just what happened after that the story is picked up "six years later."

There are no big moments in "The Honey Bee," except perhaps that the prize fight may interest the men and shock the women. The entire production is very commonplace and there are several attempts at comedy which are bad and one especially is actually vulgar. The players are all very much aware that they are before the camera and there are no characters that could be called real or lifelike. Whoever cut the picture should have controlled the scissors better. In one section he has the players in one room going through a scene and the next flash—and there's no title between—shows them in another set and with different clothes on.

Margarita Sylva as Holding's secretary is shown in the Latin Quarter of Paris, although there's no reason given for her being there. She comes in contact with a theatrical troupe which is all excited over the arrival of baby in the company and the fact that it is ill, and they don't know how to take care of it. No sense to this because under ordinary circumstances the child would not be separated from its mother, who was in the hospital.

Anyway Margarita agrees to stay and take care of the infant. In the same boarding house is an American prize fighter who takes an interest in Margarita and her care of the infant. Through their joint minding of the baby they fall in love, but when Margarita sees her sweetheart in action she decides that she does not want him and is still in love with Holding. Old boy Western Union does the trick again by calling Margarita to Holding and finishes it up nicely by advising Holding of the death of his wife.

Fight Scene May Get It by With the Men

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is just one of those pictures that you play without talking about it one way or the other. There's only one way you could talk about this and that wouldn't be good for the B. O. So just slide it in if you have to unless you want to take a shot at the male members of your clientele and boost the fight scenes, though this sequence isn't long enough nor big enough to do much talking about. The players won't stand any boosting either.

You won't be able to do much with this title because it hasn't much to do with the story itself; although in the opening reel they endeavor to work out a simile that doesn't mean very much. It would not be well to try to get them in by means of catchlines because nothing that you could say truthfully would be big enough to attract them.

DETAIL....Much of it is bad, both in regard to small and important matters.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Hero saves girl from villain who plots to rob her of her share in mine.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

This story would have at least registered as average had it been handled with the average amount of skill and smoothness that give polish to the majority of western productions. As presented here, however, there are so many flaws of direction and story construction that it fails to convince or impress as a whole. Aside from a few thrills, such as the star's fist fight, and later, his gun fight with his enemies and a few snatches of comedy, the production contains little to recommend.

The hero, Taylor, goes to Kansas City to find the daughter of his mining partner, said partner having been murdered in cold blood by conspirators. He can't locate her in the city, but on the train home, finds himself in the seat adjoining her, her uncle and Carrington, very much of a villain, who has the uncle in his power. Of course, Carrington talks over his entire plot so that Taylor can hear it and then brazenly threatens to punch his face because he listened.

There is a holdup on the train, and Taylor puts the highwaymen to rout in a rather well-handled sequence. In the western town, affairs narrow down to a battle between Carrington and Taylor, the former attempting to put him out of favor with the public and the girl, and the latter nobly defending himself. There are a few good fights scattered throughout the action and the stuff on the ranch between Taylor and the girl registers as pretty good comedy.

But the details of the production prove its undoing. On the train, Carrington tells the girl that they are going to find her father and yet she expresses no surprise later, when she discovers that he has met a violent death. Taylor, musing in the twilight, looks off and sees a pretty lake, which certainly didn't belong anywhere in the confines of his ranch.

Carrington, the villain, is quite overdone by Stanton Heck. And the performance is made the more farfetched by some terribly crude melodramatic subtitles. His pursuit of the girl in the final sequence, when he chases her through all the buildings on the ranch, is liable to prove laughable before most audiences.

Buck Jones has a pleasing personality, but it doesn't shine very brightly in this picture. Others who appear in his support are Winifred Westover, Billy Elmer, George Kunkel, Harry Dunkinson, Fred Herzog and E. B. Tilton.

This One Can't Compete With The Average Run Of Westerns

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As far as westerns go, this one can't compare with the average run of such productions. Its faults dominate over a story that certainly contained the average number of possibilities. Had the continuity been smooth and the direction comprehensive of all plot and production details, there would have been a different story to tell.

The holdup stuff, the fist and gun fights and the comedy snatches may prove appealing to audiences of easy-going character and might even make up for the shortcomings in story development. But those who are accustomed to seeing westerns made with just an average display of ability, will be liable to resent many of the bad spots in this one.

Buck Jones has a very pleasing personality, rides well and has an ability to do stunts. But as far as the stunts go, there is nothing revealed in this that hasn't been shown on the screen heretofore.

Little Redeeming About This Latest Kerrigan

STORY.....Obvious and not the least bit original; entirely too much helter skelter action.
DIRECTION.....Not good; several noticeable errors that creep in.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Fair
LIGHTINGS.....Not the best
CAMERA WORK.....All right
STAR.....Quite daring as an escaped convict; makes no special impression.
SUPPORT.....Fritzi Brunette manages to pull through the excitement; remainder of cast all overacted.
EXTERIORS.....Not many
INTERIORS .....Satisfactory
DETAIL.....Received ordinary attention
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Convict escapes and proves innocence.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

This one doesn't boast of anything new in story or treatment. The opening is the only really effective bit in the picture. It is a snow scene and convict "No. 99" is shown outside the prison walls where he escapes in a vacant limousine. How he has affected the escape is none of your affair. After jumbling through the five reels, in which the star encounters much difficulty in avoiding recapture, they finally reach the point where he secures evidence which proves his innocence.

The picture is peopled with several superfluous characters which merely serve to add to the confusion more than any else that they do. And if you don't get dizzy watching them chase in and out,—in and out windows, in and out rooms and from the house to the garage, you're good. This is faulty direction and it continues through the entire picture. The scene continually shifts from one room to another, with the cast, which is a large one, all piling along in like a flock of geese. This is tiresome to say the least.

There are numerous flaws that indicate extreme lack of care. For instance, the convict's uniform is found and later disappears, but one of the prison guards who is looking for the convict, calmly shakes his head and says he doesn't know what he did with it. And they let it go at that. Another—the convict has mingled among the guests in the house the guards are searching, but his evening clothes seem to disguise his face wonderfully. The guards never recognize him.

Then there was a wealth of convenience to help along the "plot." All the characters necessary to carry through the story are found in one house as the guests of the owner. Among them are a member of the State Board of Pardons, the man who sent "No. 99" to jail and a well known jurist.

Without telling you how or why, they land escaped convict Warren in the home of Fritzi Brunette and her father, Emmett King. Fritzi agrees to give Warren a chance to prove his innocence. Her splendid confidence leads her into all sorts of perilous ventures in her effort to aid Warren. She provides him with her brother's clothes and he becomes a guest in the home under the name of Phillip Valentine, a friend of her brother's.

Of course in due time Valentine actually arrives unexpectedly and there is much complication. Cynthia and Warren manage to bundle Phillip off to the garage where they lock him in. Fortunately Phillip is intoxicated, so he offers no resistance. By the time papa Valentine arrives looking for his son, Warren has secured the evidence that proves his innocence, and explanations follow.

Success Of This Depends On Class You Cater To

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There's not much to be said in favor of this. Granting that you cater to a crowd that are satisfied with a lot of so-called action, that of the helter skelter variety, "No 99" may strike them as great. And there's no doubt about it. When it comes to real physical action, this has a lot of it even if it is in the form of exercise for the cast.

The star probably has a number of admirers among the women in typical "fan" communities, so all you will have to do is announce his name for them. They may like his daring, law defying escape and the splendid confidence and support of the heroine. Use these if you want catchlines: "If you were confronted by an escaped convict in your boudoir, would you listen to his story and then give him a chance to prove his innocence? That's what one girl did."

DIRECTION.....Good for the most part but takes story too seriously toward close.

SUPPORT.....Theodore Weston, Jr., fine boy performer.
EXTERIORS.....Some pretty snow stuff and contrasting southern scenes.
INTERIORS ..... Fitting
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY....Adventures of young boarding school girl who wanted to be thought wicked.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Here is a delightful and real little light comedy idea that is handicapped at the end by a lot of superfluous footage. At the start and up to a point at which the average length feature would conclude, the action is rarely amusing, but there is too much detail employed in straightening out the tangle at the end and the action becomes wearisome. Some careful cutting would result in a mighty fine picture, especially if the editor removed some of the scenes in which the director has taken the story altogether too seriously.

Frances Marion's plot and the wealth of amusing situations she has provided center around the life of a young boarding school girl who, realistically, wants to be thought older than she is and who, in the bargain, would like to be looked upon as sophistication itself. It is a role ideally suited to Olive Thomas, one which she handles extraordinarily well. Furthermore, the director has for the greater part of the pictue kept in a light mood, only at the end falling into a serious vein that makes his work remarkably dull.

Miss Thomas appears as Genevieve King, a southern youngster who is sent to a northern boarding school by a more or less harrassed father. At the military academy across the way is Bill, Genevieve's childhood playmate. This part is excellently taken by a boy actor, Theodore Weston, Jr. Bill's scenes of calf-like romance with Genevieve and his showing off before the smaller boys at the academy all strike a very real and amusing note.

The situation confronting Genevieve when the head of the school goes to drag her away from a country club dance whither she has gone with Richard Channing, a handsome stranger idolized from afar by all the girls, is real in its comedy and excellently played.

They work in a very amusing farcical sequence when Genevieve returns to her home dressed in the latest vamp outfit from New York. She shocks all the natives by feigning a "double life." It is in straightening out this tangle in which two crooks are introduced, that the director has run into a totally out of place serious mood and burdened the action with tiresome detail.

On the whole, however, "The Flapper" can be considered a very unusual comedy. It is splendidly subtitled and there are a wealth of pretty snow scenes as backgrounds. William Carleton and Arthur Housman are others who appear in the star's support.

Has Big Appeal For The Feminine In Your Audiences

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If they edited this in the latter reels you would be sure of a pretty nearly perfect light comedy. It deals with a young girl in as real a fashion as the Booth Tarkington stories do with young boys. And that's saying a lot. But whether the film is edited or not you can run it and be pretty sure that it will more than satisfy. The majority of it is so good that they'll be quite liable to overlook the bad spots in the last two reels.

Make your appeal to the girls and the feminine sex in general in your advertising. A line such as "The adventures of a real girl who went to boarding school and wanted to be thought 'wicked'; full of humor; one big laugh' might be used. If your crowd likes Olive Thomas play her up well as she does fine work here. Also mention Frances Marion's name. She is one of the few very well known screen authors. Cash in on the publicity and popularity that are hers.

STORY.....Several convenient bits; mostly familiar situations.
DIRECTION.....Injects slight comedy moments that are appreciated; generally well handled.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Good
LIGHTINGS .....Average
CAMERA WORK.....Satisfactory
SUPPORT.....Not an exceptionally well picked cast; Harrison Ford pleasing enough lover.
EXTERIORS.....Hardly any INTERIORS.....Adequate sets
DETAIL.....Some good comedy sub-titles
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Convent girl who marries guardian's "black sheep" brother.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,607 feet

If it wasn't for the truly pleasing personality of the star and a slight comedy vein that has been injected mostly through the aid of some well written sub-titles, "A Lady in Love" would not fare as well as it has. The story in the main contains many familiar situations and vaguely plausible bits that are liable to cause a feeling of boredom rather than sympathy for the character or an understanding of the authors' intention.

Miss Clayton is the main reason for the picture getting by, and whoever wrote the titles had a good sense of humor or perhaps an appropriate sense for the lines fit the moment very well. However, the production is virtually flooded with sub-titles that follow nearly every scene. Many of them are needed to fill in the gaps in continuity, but there are many that are absolutely unnecessary. One thing that audiences are going to be thankful for, though, is the fact that the heroine's lover does not forsake his sweetheart the minute he has reason enough to do so. He remains on the scene until the satisfactory conclusion.

Generally speaking those responsible have managed to make a pretty fair picture from the material they had to work with, and in view of its rather slight possibilities, "A Lady in Love" will make fairly pleasing entertainment. The story has not been given an expensive production because it doesn't warrant it. It has been supplied with appropriate sets. The studio work has been well done, except perhaps in the garden fete which doesn't exactly resemble a garden.

A sort of prologue establishes that Barbara has eloped with her guardian's brother, Burton Sedgewick, the black sheep of the Sedgewick family. Immediately following the ceremony Burton is confronted by his wife and child, whereupon he leaves town alone, the wives consoling each other. Barbara takes wife No. 1 to her guardian, George Sedgewick, and tells the story. Thereafter the first wife and child remain in George's home, as also does Barbara, much to the disgust of George's jealous wife.

Some time later finds Barbara in New York where she meets John Brent, lawyer and lover. She writes her guardian to arrange a divorce from Burton so she can marry Brent, but it turns out that Brent is the guardian's lawyer. In the meantime Barbara foils the plan of Burton's "business associate," Rhodes, to elope with the guardian's wife, so, to get back at her, Rhode tells what he knows about Burton and Barbara. Nevertheless Brent stays around and it all turns out very happily when it is learned that Burton was legally married to wife No. 1, thereby nullifying the marriage with Barbara. This clears the road for Barbara and Brent.

Use Star's Name. Doesn't Merit Exploitation Otherwise

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

From both story and production standpoint, "A Lady in Love" is an average program offering. There are no high lights to brag about nor anything big in the way of production qualities, so it had better be handled as a straight program feature without any particular promises or exploitation. It offers very little in the way of advertising possibilities unless you care to make a point of the "marry in haste" idea, in which case you could use the following lines: "Even the walls of the convent didn't stop Barbara from marrying in haste. But see how even more hastily she realized her mistake. Be sure you love before you leap. See 'A Lady in Love' and you'll know why."

Make use of the star's name. This is your best bet for this picture. Those who like Miss Clayton will most likely be satisfied with "A Lady in Love." Harrison Ford has somewhat of a reputation as a screen lover, so for the benefit of the "sweet sixteens" you might mention his name.

Westerns are so plentiful among feature pictures even in the present day that they have to be pretty well made and decorated with unusual thrills to earn more than passing notice. Such a picture is "The Terror." Among the better western pictures it ranks very high, this because of a well contrived plot and some real hair raising thrills that are done realistically and which are worked into the story smoothly.

Tom Mix appears as Bat Carson, a U. S. Deputy Marshall, who is summoned to a western town to investigate holdups of shipments of gold from a nearby mine. They work in a fine stirring sequence at the start when Bat becomes acquainted with the heroine, Phyllis, when her hat blows out the train window. Bat, riding along the road, sweeps it up and spurs his horse on until he catches the train, when he returns it to her.

At the office of the mine Bat soon discovers that Phil, Phyllis' brother, is the tool of the robbers. One day in Phil's presence he lets drop the remark that he is to bring in a shipment of gold from the mine. The truck is subsequently attacked but in a thrilling chase down the side of the hill Bat evades the bandits.

Later Bat learns that the dance hall owner and the sheriff are the master minds back of Phil. He has Phil arrested but counts on acquitting him during the trial when he takes the evidence of Fay LaCross, cast off sweetheart of the dance hall owner. But the villains have Fay kidnapped on the day of the trial, thinking in this way to protect themselves.

Bat thereupon goes to her rescue and they stage a series of great thrills showing him effecting it and then dodging the pursuers. A high dive off a cliff into an old quarry, a swim under water while the bandits pepper the pond with bullets, and some fine tricks with the stage coach and on horse back complete the star witness' rescue and Phyllis' brother is saved. Of course the finale reveals the usual love scene between Bat and Phyllis.

Mix pleases in his rôle and does the stunts with a fearlessness that is admirable. He receives capable support from Francelia Billington, Charles K. French, Lester Cuneo, Lucille Younge, Joseph Bennett and Wilbur Higby.

Western And Tom Mix Fans Will Eat This Up Whole

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Your western fans and your Tom Mix fans are going to eat this one up. It is far and above the usual picture laid on the plains, its melodramatic story continually holds the attention and the thrills are thrills in every sense of the word.

You can go the limit in describing these thrills in your advertising, for they certainly make you sit up and take notice. Mention the high dive, the swim under water and the way in which they bring hero and heroine together for the first time. These are the best stunts offered.

Tom Mix deserves featuring prominently. You can also get some good publicity out of the fact that he wrote the story. Mix is proving himself capable of writing what best suits him, as his last picture demonstrated, and is deserving of much of the credit for making "The Terror" the fine western it is.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Evidently produced somewhere in Europe, this picture, the product of a British company, appears to be expressly designed to display the magnificent sex appeal of Anna Bos, its star. Miss Bos has all the vamps of California and Fort Lee outstripped when it comes to a straight show-down of plain sex appeal. She has a superb figure, which she knows how to drape and use to the best advantage, and her bobbed hair reveals a very appealingly naughty face.

Aside from Miss Bos and her vampings, "Carmen of the North" contains little to commend it before even those transient audiences that will probably delight in the star's physical appeal. The plot reveals no continuity, is simple to the point of being elemental, and in the production, it is embellished with no atmosphere or detail. Furthermore, it contains some impossible coincidences and "pictorial licenses" that certainly should never have been licensed.

The hero is from the soil and departs for the army. His first duty is to arrest "Carmen," who has stabbed another worker in the cigarette factory because she had spit in her face. However, Carmen puts on the vamps and soon gets Joseph, the hero dizzy. He releases her from prison and later forsakes the army and joins her in the underworld haunt of smugglers. But not before he has suffered several tortuous visions of his mother and sweetheart at home.

In time, Carmen meets a great baritone, and Joseph is jilted. Carmen and the baritone marry. Joseph sinks to the depths and grows a beard. Eventually, he tries to murder his successor, but is caught and jailed for two years. Released, his mother and sweetheart welcome him back to the soil with open arms.

Interest in this is created and maintained solely through the star's appearance and the many sequences in which she vamps as never did Theda. The rest of the cast is rather negligible, both Joseph and the baritone suffering somewhat from lack of direction.

Some of the exteriors are distinctly foreign. One reveals a street canal and might be Venice. The interiors are, for the most part, just corners of settings.

It's Appeal is Very Limited

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As far as even production and well developed story goes, "Carmen of the North" is pretty close to the zero mark. Its sole point of appeal is in the great sex appeal of the star and the many sequences in which she lets lose her vamping powers.

It is hardly necessary to say that this has no place in the family theatres that cater to refined audiences, nor in the big houses that play to people educated up to expect something pretty good in the way of story and production.

In fact, it seems that the one class of houses that this is suited for is the transient, daily change theatres. Here the out-and-out sex appeal may be relished.

"Carmen of the North" it is called. Evidently the "North" means a northern part of Europe. The title is misleading and perplexing.

Some Short Reels

"Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes"—Educational

What is alluded to as the "Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" is one of the phenomena of nature—a level in Alaska where in June, 1912, large quantities of steam charged with hydrofluoric acid started to escape from beneath the earth's surface. An expedition of the National Geographic Society to the turbulent valley has resulted in some remarkable pictures of the disturbance. Educational is releasing the reel which possesses great instructive qualities rather than scenic beauty. The titles explain everything in an interesting manner and the shots of the fumeroles, as the rising streams of vapor are called, more than hold attention. One scene shows one of the explorers lowering himself into a crater when come gases and clouds of steam, and assuredly is an unusual spectacle. E. C. Kolb and D. B. Church photographed the production, which is a tribute to the scientific use of the motion picture camera.

"Nothing But Girls"—Fox

This Mutt and Jeff number is by no means up to the very high standard that has been maintained in this series recently. The idea contained is not definite, the usual variety of tricks is not present and even the animation is at times faulty. Jeff meets the professor of a girls' seminary in a saloon. The professor is the same height as Jeff, but wears a beard. The best laugh in the picture comes when Jeff shoots off the professor's beard, said beard having been acting strangely lifelike while the professor lay on the floor intoxicated. Afterwards Jeff wears his disguise into the school and indulges in flirtations with various of the girls.

"Love and Gasolene"—Universal

Folks who follow slapstick comedies will recognize many of the bits included in this one. Most of them have been used before, some only recently. There are several commendable stunts and the offering as a whole registers numerous laughs. Sophisticated audiences will, however, have seen much of the material found in this. The trick of rolling a pipe out of some makin's, chase at the finish, use of hammers on the villain while glued to the floor and others are hardly novel. Having the automobile and motorcycle ride into the tunnel in the chase and emerge covered with soot after a train is seen coming out is one creditable idea and the chimney stuff is also up to the mark. Any one who hasn't seen most of the stuff used herein will laugh heartily at this, for it is good slapstick.

"His Breach of Promise"—Christie

Beach stuff makes up the greater part of the Christie reel in which Bobby Vernon is featured together with Vera Steadman. As usual, the bathing girls in one-piece uniforms frolic about gleefully, and there are some situations of real value included. Vernon, an atrocious he-vamp, is asked by a show producer to hold his robe. The maids, desirous of joining the chorus of "Zigheeld's" shows, seeing his garment on Vernon approach Bobby, chase him along the beach and cause him to get into the bad graces of his sweetheart. He gets out of it by returning the troublesome piece of wearing apparel. They have photographed it splendidly and turned out an accepable comedy of this length.

"Pugs and Pals"—Vitagraph

Jimmy Aubrey is starred in a Vitagraph two-reeler replete with material of the type usually found in slapstick comedies. There are a few mirth-provoking bits in the piece, but for the greater part it fails to rise above the ordinary. The setting selected for the production is in the slums, where Aubrey, two other men not credited and a youngster partake in a series of fights and chases. As usual, various objects are bounced off the craniums of the different performers and fisticuffs are engaged in with considerable frequency. One scene wherein a search for a bottle of liquor is conducted, results in some corking man-hole stuff, with cars running along on the various tracks serving to add some creditable touches. In the opening portion there is also a giggle, but most of it does not arouse any great enthusiasm.

"Hip Hip Hypnotism"—Gayety

Mirth-provoking bits are to be found in abundance in this Gayety one-reeler in which George Ovey is featured. The laughs start coming early in the production and continue right up to the finish, making this one of the best offerings turned out with Ovey in a long while. The start finds him at a boarding house, where he is in disfavor with the lady who runs the establishment for his failure to pay his rent with sufficient promptness. When he secures a book on hypnotism and starts practising on the various people in the house, who think him crazy and humor him, the fun results. Lillian Biron is also prominent in the production in which the other characters also perform well. Ovey is especially clever this time.

"A Fitting Gift"—Bray-Goldwyn

Judge Rummy, Tad's cartoon creation, is seen in the animated cartoon which makes up the opening part of this Bray comic. Some of the material in it is laughable, but most of it is neither unusual as offerings of this sort go, nor especially meritorious. Bits of wit gathered from the press at large make up the Lampoons section. The comments selected have not been arranged very well and many of them are not very funny. Numerous offerings consisting entirely or largely of subtitles are to be found on the market now and they have ceased to be a novelty, which doesn't make it especially easy for this.

"A Husband in Haste"—Christie

Two young people who desire to wed resort to a ruse to gain the consent of the bride-to-be's father, which furnishes the theme of this single reeler. In it Earl Rodney and Helen Darling play the featured roles, with Eddie Barry also a prominent character. The plot is not essentially novel, but has been handled well and clothed with incidents of sufficient merit to make it a creditable offering. When Rodney visits the town in which his sweetheart dwells, he finds all means of transportation tied up and fools a doctor into giving him a ride and going out of his way. To his dismay, he discovers that the doctor is the girl's father and only when Eddie Barry, posing as the second choice of the girl, in a touch make-up terrifies the proud parent, is Rodney able to get him to agree to the matrimonial ceremony.

"Father's Close Shave"—Pathe

As in the first of the "Bringing Up Father" two reelers, this has a novel pair of trailers which are interesting and enhance the value of the production. The manner in which it has been staged is elaborate and apropriate and the technical end generally suitable. Johnny Ray as Jiggs, Margaret Fitzroy as Maggie and Laura La Plante as the daughter all delineate the leading characters as originally drawn by George McManus well. Where they have again failed is in getting up a suitable story. In that respect, this is not an improvement over the first of the series. They have injected some beach stuff with a bevy of damsels in one-piece bathing costumes frolicing about on the beach. Material of that type is always well received, but on the other hand the lack of creditable bits of comedy business and story material that is up to the mark will count against this. The name of the cartoons from which these offerings are adapted will help draw them in, but unless there is a marked improvement in the quality of story material employed they will lose their power. Some of the incidents found in this are funny enough, but the laughs are certainly not too numerous. Reggie Morris directed.

"The Wild West"—Reelcraft

Comedy producers have availed themselves of the idea of burlesquing the west, where bloody red Indians and bad men discharge firearms at their hapless victims, on many occasions. Grover Jones, who wrote and directed Milburn Moranti in this two reeler, has also gone to the wild and woolly section of the land for his material and has turned out an offering that will hold its own. Of course, it is not an easy matter to think of original stuff in that direction, but a reasonable amount of new stuff has been inserted and that should be sufficient to make them overlook some of the used material. The manner in which Moranti causes the wicked bandit to weep by his soulful playing of the concertina, the opening scene in which the parrot is seen and several others hit the spot. Were it not for the fact that the idea on which it is based has been used too frequently, the poker game episode would also have the desired effect. Fritzi Ridgeway, in the role of the scheming western lass, winks cruelly, while Bruce Smith and Alfred Hewston are other credited members of the cast.

Short Reels

Bray Pictograph, No. 436—Goldwyn

Venezuela furnished the material for two of the four parts which comprise this Bray reel. "Plenty of Beef on the Orinoco" shows how Venezuelan, long-horned steers of the same type found in the western regions of the United States are shipped abroad, and "Cock Fighting in Venezuela" has also been shot in South Africa. That section shows the details conected with the preparation of the combatants, the ring in which the struggle takes place and audience watching the scrap. Work on a Rex Beach production is seen in still another portion and then Milt Gross draws some cartoons. The ones found in this offering are all up to the mark and furnish a highly creditable conclusion to the film.

"The Home of the Seminoles"—Ford-Goldwyn

Florida, home of the Seminoles who live in the Everglades region, is the scene of this Ford reel, which is still another deviation from the usual run of industrials. The title would cause one to expect it to be essentially a scenic and there are several bits of beauty to be found in it, but for the greater part it is a study of the natives. The Indians are shown in various attitudes and at different kinds of work, with camping grounds furnishing the background, most of the time. Nothing unusual in the way of travel reels, but acceptable.

"Kissed in a Harem"—Gayety

Chase stuff, some fairly humorous and the rest of it not particularly valuable figures prominently in a Gayety one-reeler in which Billy Fletcher and Vera Reynolds are featured. Several highly commendable situations and bits of business help it along considerably until the finish which is somewhat abrupt, what little bit of a theme had been started being cut rather short. There is a huge Turk in the offering, a character who furnishes a distinct contrast to the more or less diminutive Fletcher. Vera Reynolds is not very prominent in the production which is only good in spots.

"Merely a Maid"—Pathe

One very funny scene will undoubtedly prove of value in this single reel Rolin comedy, the first in which Beatrice La Plante is starred for release through Pathe. At the table where two of the ladies seated remove their slippers, much confusion is caused when they make offorts to secure them. Quite by accident, their nether extremities come in contact with those of gentlemen seated beside them, flirtations, rather bold in most cases, start and trouble starts. Most of the rest of it is ordinary riotous comedy. The star apparently is a comedienne who has capabilities, but in this, whatever ability she may possess is almost lost in the melange of material which is of ordinary quality. F. Neumeyer directed and did about all that could have been expected with the material given him. The commendable part will help this; it cannot make a hit out of it.

"School Days"—Vitagraph

Knock-about comedy is the key-note in Larry Semon's newest two reeler, the greater part of which is set in a class room. The rest of it takes place on a farm, and throughout the various characters tumble about, splash one another with thick sticky substances, roll in mud and go through various other familiar slapstick stunts. What makes this a satisfactory offering of its type is the fact that there are several novel bits and that it has been produced on a lavish scale. Some of the stuff that takes place in the temple of education is really humorous, the bit wherein the chicks creep out of the star's trousers after some eggs in his pocket are smashed will provoke a giggle and other touches will also elicit favorable comment. Some of the riotous material could be cut to advantage, but, generally, this will hold its own.

"Content"—Selznick

Scores of authors and motto makers have expounded their theories on the theme of being satisfied with things possessed. Now Herbert Kaufman in his first "Editorial" produced for Selznick discusses contentment in a sort of picturized fable. The single-reeler is titled in verse and staged in an elaborate Oriental setting. Two characters of importance are seen in the offering and these perform acceptably. Where the piece is at fault is in the plot which is not very novel as far as treatment or thought behind it is concerned. It holds the eye and is an unusual type of picture.

"The Dreamer"—Reelcraft

Billy West's newest effusion has a few scenes that will cause audiences to laugh, but really humorous bits are not included in sufficient numbers to get it over with critical fans. When West is seen together with Ted Lorch in the role of a detective, on the park bench, mirth is provoked, and later Leo White also appears. Ethelyn Gibson adds a feminine smile to the piece. At the finish, they expose what happened previously as a dream—a conclusion not at all necessary here. The opening bit of footage in which the star and a darkey youngster play with the sinful cubes, the shimmy portion and others can be depended upon to please West's followers.

"Playthings of Childhood"—Ford

As in one of the other recent releases of this organization, instead of following some more or less complicated industry in this Ford reel, they have taken kindred subjects, that is, some toys—dolls, toy pianos, and a doll house, and have shown some of the processes these objects must undergo before they are completed. It is up to the standard of the usual Ford industrial, and although its entertainment value is not of unusual proportions, its educational value is large.

"The Night Rider"—Reelcraft

Probably, critical fans will find this obvious, but the average follower of the short western will be well satisfied with it. This is in fact one of the best Texas Guinan has done in a while and holds interest quite well. There is an element of mystery in the two reeler, and as usual in the Guinan releases, comedy relief is much in evidence. Action is to be had in this in sufficient proportion to the story material, but the principal fault is that they diminish the suspense by failing to place either of the two leading characters in sufficient danger. The theme has been developed acceptably, however, and there is enough to make them laugh and whoop it up. They could, however, have made it thrill them more. Jay Hunt directed, and T. N. T. Harvey is again the leading man.

Bray Pictograph, No. 437—Goldwyn

How members of the Traveller's Aid Society welcome imigrants to our shores is seen in the opening part of a Bray reel, in which the proper atmosphere has been injected. They have started on the decks of the ship and followed some of the passengers until they are established in their new country. Childe Hassam, well known painter and etcher, is seen at work in the following part, and then comes a Max Fleischer "Out of the Ink-Well" cartoon. This part is as usual expertly animated and up to the standard of the average maintained in Fleischer's series. An acceptable magazine.

"Fore and After"—Christie

Bits of business which are rather disconnected and several of which have no particular connection with the story are numerous in this Christie reel, in which golf links are the scene of the action. Charlotte Merriam and Earl Rodney are featured in it, with Eddie Barry also occupying a role of importance. The latter is inclined to overdraw his character, but that is not the essential weakness of this. The lack of a continuous plot is the great fault. A bit of a theme begins to evolve after more than half of it is over, several inconsequential scenes having been injected into the early portion, and the laughs contained in this are almost entirely confined to the latter part.

"Parked in the Park"—Gayety

Before this single reel Gayety comedy gets very well under way, there is some footage confined to the nether extremities of the characters, material that is funny. Shortly thereafter, however, this develops into a very ordinary sort of production, the incidents linked about the bit of a theme included not being of great value. There is a bit of trick photography which helps, the portion in which Billy Fletcher, who is featured together with Vera Reynolds, sneezes so that various pieces of furniture fly from the interior of the house back to the wagon helping. That and the stuff at the start are not sufficient, however, to get this over with much to spare.

"In Happy Alsace"—Famous Players

With the advent of the French into Alsace, that war-ridden land has once again assumed a cheerful aspect. Burton Holmes has shot this travel reel in that state, a parade celebrating the return to France of the territory occupying the greater portion of it. A view of the field in which myriad poppies are seen and close-ups of a few of these add pleasing touches to the offering, as do the scenes in which the dwellers are seen at their daily toil, the oxen drag a cart along and other peaceful shots. A meritorious travel subject.

Niebuhr said that plans had practically been completed for a distribution arrangement in this country through independent exchanges and that all but two territories had been closed up. Under this plan franchise holders would sit in with the executive council of American Cinema to determine values and the negative costs of future productions.

As soon as the reorganization is completed plans now laid out will be carried through by which American Cinema will have a large foreign organization with headquarters in at least 12 European centers.

To Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce Expected to Prove Unusual

When L. J. Selznick addresses the members of the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce at the Astor today at lunch, he is expected to say a few things that will prove unusually interesting and it would not be surprising if his remarks proved the keynote of the proposed plan to bring new life into the National Association in anticipation of the forthcoming annual meeting and election of officers at Cleveland.

It is understood that Mr. Selznick has been asked to speak on the general question of why exhibitors should remain exhibitors and producers remain producers.

shall be engaged immediately to visit the different territories, in order to sell territorial franchises and organize the units.

"The officers of both companies will organize the creditors' committee and carry the negotiations with that committee and all the creditors of both companies for the settlement of all claims."

Other features in the proposed plan are:

"The company will sell territorial units covering the whole United States. Preference will be given to United members who would desire to acquire any territory.

"Each territorial unit in all future negotiations shall be rated on a percentage scale similar to the schedule of First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"The purchaser and owner of a territorial unit shall have the right to assign his rights to a local company which he may organize for that purpose and at least one distributing exchange shall be maintained in the territory. All expense for operating such exchange shall be borne by the unit.

"A fund of $200,000 shall be created for the advance cost of new pictures, each territorial unit shall immediately pay its proportionate share, as per his rating.

"Negatives shall be purchased by the executive committee and shall be supplied to the units at cost. Each unit shall pay its share of such cost as per his rating."

The theater company proposes to apportion to the units $50,000 or half of the amount of the common stock of the productions company which it owns, this to be limited according to the rating of the unit. This block of stock is to be pooled in New York while sales are conducted on the curb market on a basis of ¼. Thus if a broker sells 100 shares, 25 of the lot will be owned by the units.

Milton M. Goldsmith said yesterday that plans of reorganization had reached the stage where five weeks ought to see the company back on its feet and ready for business again.

In the Courts

Supreme Court Justice Tierney has denied an application by the Novagraph Film Corp. against Earle Emlay, the Motion Prod. Co., and others to restrain them from manufacturing a high speed camera attached to which is a secret device. The plaintiff alleges that it bought the device from Emlay under an agreement that he for ten years would not disclose its construction to anyone else. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants are about to make the camera on the advice of Emlay. Justice Tierney said that the device has not been patented, and that Emlay was not before the court and because there are no contractual relations between the other defendants and the plaintiff there is no ground for the injunction.

Harris Wins Court Decision

William Harris, Jr., has won a court action which protects the title "Abraham Lincoln" from use in any other play or motion picture that may be produced.

Harris owns the producing rights for John Drinkwater's play for the United States and Canada.

Bayne Heads Unit

Forms Associated News Service with Six Reels Available Weekly

Capt. E. McL. Bayne, head of the Kinograms Publishing Co., is president of a new company called Associated Screen News, capitalized in Albany at $500,000.

The new company will eventually provide for the merging of whatever units are now being operated by Bayne. Six reels of news material are released weekly by the Bayne organization, these being two from Kinograms, two from Selznick and the Gaumont Graphic and News.

The deal with Gaumont which Bayne closed recently gave him the Gaumont laboratories as well as the Gaumont releases, which include a reel called Pictorial Life.

It was stated yesterday that Bayne will probably branch out into the production of educationals and travelogues, but no information could be obtained as to just what new production would be entered upon. It was said that the output would be governed entirely by the market needs.

Kansas City, Kans.—Richards and Flynn, owners of the First National franchise for Kansas and the 12th St. and Wonderland theaters here, have formed a Delaware corporation known as the Richards and Flynn Producing Co. which will produce a series of pictures starring Jack Gardner.

Gardner is under contract to make 12 productions for the new company, which will produce in Los Angeles commencing in August.

Nugent J. Flynn, president of the First National Film Co., leaves for Europe the end of the month on a pleasure trip.

The Fox convention got actively under way yesterday in the west ball room of the Commodore.

After the business sessions the field force went to the theater.

For Permanent Body

Exchangemen Will Elect Officers and Round Out Organization at Sessions Under Way

The second day's session of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was held behind closed doors at the Astor.

No official statement was issued, but it is understood that the various independent exchangemen are talking over the perfection of the organization.

Apparently Joe Friedman is only temporary president of the body, for one member stated that permanent officers and a permanent committee of five which is to have full say in the taking over productions will be elected before the final session closes.

Ways and means of perfecting a national distributing medium will also be discussed. It is understood that the personnel of the organization is not complete as yet and that several territories are yet to be included before the organization will have representation all over the country.

The following members of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., are in town attending the sessions over which Joe Friedman of Chicago is presiding:

J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players, Chicago; D. Chatkin, Marion Kohn, San Francisco; J. J. Allen, Toronto; Mr. Kyler, Supreme Photoplays, Denver; Sam Werner, United Film Service, St. Louis; Al Kahn, Crescent Film Co., Kansas City; Ralph Wettstein, Midwest Distributing Co., Milwaukee; F. W. Thayer, Merit Film Corp., Minneapolis; J. E. Pearce, Pearce Films, New Orleans; H. Charnas, Standard Film Service Co., Cleveland; Harry Lande, Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh; Sam Grand, Federal Feature Film Corp., Boston; Ben Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; A. G. Whyte, Empire State Film Corp., New York, and Fitzpatrick and McElroy of Chicago.

Metro Convention Opens Today

The annual Metro convention opens today at the Astor. The field force is in town to attend the three day session.

Richard A. Rowland, Marcus Loew, David Bernstein and W. E. Atkinson are scheduled to make addresses. After a series of sales talks during the day the managers will see Ed Wynn's Carnival tonight.

The reason for an entrance of the L. and T. people in Milwaukee is generally credited to the purchase of the Merrill here by Goldwyn and Ascher Bros. of Chicago.

stand how the differ[illegible]t questions of the industry could be solved unless every branch of the industry co-operated to the end that they at least understand each other and were working in harmony. As far as the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was concerned he felt that if the exhibitors wanted fair representation they should have it if they decided they wanted it, and he was certainly most in favor of such a policy. Mr. Selznick said he could see no reason why exhibitors and producers should not work together whereby the exhibitor organizations would be called into conference with the National Association upon any question that effected the industry as a whole.

He said he was going to stand for such a policy and if necessary fight for such a policy at the Cleveland meeting of the National Association.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

For "The Silver Horde," the Rex Beach production, Goldwyn effected a tie-up that made the name of that production quite conspicuous all over the town. 2,000 window stickers, 11 x22, were placed both inside and outside of all of the United Cigar Stores in New York City. These carried portraits of Beach, who expressed satisfaction with the Ricoro cigar. Placing stickers on taxicabs starting May 1 was also a good scheme. Illuminated window displays showing fish caught in a net were placed in various stores in New York and autlying towns. At Weaver's, 66th St. and Broadway, an artist painted from 3 to 5 in the afternoon and 7 to 8 in the evening, daily. His portraits were of Rex Beach, as well as Myrtle Stedman and Betty Blythe, the featured actresses in "The Silver Horde." 50,000 circulars were also used for advance publicity as regards the engagement of the production at the Capitol. Preceding the transfer of the film to the Broadway, early copies of evening newspapers were secured and in glaring red type, an announcement to that effect printed across the front page. Newspaper advertising and billboard advertising were also used extensively to round out the campaign.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Harry Koch, manager of the Ohio, recently arranged a tie-up with a local jewelry establishment that proved to be an exploitation stunt par excellence. The entire window of the store was turned over for the entire week of the showing of "The Luck of the Irish," advertising that with each purchase a ticket, good for admission to the Ohio on any day except Sunday would be given. Being an effective display and a good scheme, the jeweler profited by it as well as the house.

Chester Has Lehrman

Los Angeles—Things are booming again at the Henry Lehrman studios in Culver City, where Mr. Lehrman is beginning to work on a series of two-reel comedies under the business mangement of C. L. Chester. Chester has taken over a contract with the First National Exhibitors' Exchange to supply 12 Lehrman comedies to this organization during the coming year.

Operations began last week on the first picture of the series which has received the temporary title of "Springtoime." Albert Ray, a juvenile who worked with Mr. Lehrman in Sunshine Comedies, and Charlotte Dawn are being featured. Besides "Springtime" Lehrman has obtained stories for two other comedies which will keep him busy for some weeks. A. B. W. Hodges, vice-president of Henry Lehrman Comedies, Inc., is in active charge of the business end of the studio at Culver City, while Allam Dudley is treasurer of the new organization.

A third Chester comedy featuring Alexander, the trained chimpanzee, and Arthur Nowell, the baby, has just been completed under the direction of William S. Campbell at the Chester Studios. These comedies are being released through Educational.

Mr. Chester is at present negotiating for the sale and distribution of another well known series of comedies. Full details of the transaction will be announced in the near future.

Mrs. Annie T. Morosco sued her husband, Oliver Morosco, for $7,011 as the value of 611½ shares of stock in the Famous Players-Lasky Co., which she alleges was taken from her by her husband on June 1, 1918.

The litigation between Robert Herbst and the Imp Film Co., started in 1917 because the defendant contracted to sell him films for South America and then broke the contract, was discontinued by Justice Whitaker because the case has been settled.

A default judgment for $1,505 was entered in the City Court against Mark D. Weinberger of the D. W. Griffith Co., on a note he made April 17 last in favor of Bernard Kurtz.

"The Saphead"

WITH ALL STAR CAST

At Broadway Theaters

This is how the Broadway theaters are presenting their programs this week. This feature will appear in the Wednesday issue of WID'S DAILY.

Capitol

The three outstanding features at the Capitol this week are popular scenes from the opera "Carmen," Metro's "Old Lady 31" and the Mack Sennett comedy, "Let 'Er Go." The unusual atmosphere and character of the feature picture make it something of a card and the audiences apparently enjoy it to the full. The "Carmen" offering is spectacular, artistically set and exceedingly well rendered by Henriette Wakefield in the title role, supported by members of the Capitol operatic school. The policy of the Capitol in presenting a condensed opera each week has brought a special clientele to the house, many persons coming for this number alone. The Mack Sennett number goes over very well, too. For the rest the Capitol News, a scenic and the overture conducted by Nat Finston round out the lengthy program.

Strand

In "Jes' Call Me Jim" Will Rogers has another "Jubilo" and is more than satisfying patrons of the Strand. Young Jimmie Rogers helps his Dad more than a little and wins a lot of admiration for himself.

The overture is "Il Guarany." The only other musical number is a selection from "Chimes of Normandy," sang by Carlo Ferretti.

A short reel subject entitled, "Modern Centaurs," shows some very fine and spectacular horse riding. The picture would have been much more interesting if the location was known. The Topical Review has some splendid air pictures taken while a plane did some stunts. A "Jerry on the Job" cartoon afforded some amusement. An Outing-Chester picture, "Pigs and Kava," presented the weird costumes of the Samoans.

Criterion

The surrounding program of "Why Change Your Wife" at the Criterion has been changed for the fifth and final week of this attraction. "Beautiful Things" still follows the overture, but the "Why Change Your Wife" song and the chorus that was previously utilized in the way of a prologue to the feature have been omitted. Instead the De Mille picture follows in right after "Beautiful Things." The concluding number is a Chaplin revival, "Behind the Screen." The Chaplin comedy is well advertised in the newspapers and played up along with the De Mille feature in the electrics.

Rialto

"The Sea Wolf" at the Rialto this week is preceded by the Rivoli-Rialto chorus singing "A Sailors' Chorus." The overture is Liszt's "Second Rhapsody," followed by the Rialto Magazine. A Snub Pollard comedy, "Grab the Ghost," completes the screen entertainment. A trumpet solo, "Caprice du Concert," by Joseph Alessi, and an organ solo complete the program.

Rivoli

Mary Miles Minter is at the Rivoli in Realart's "Nurse Marjorie." Both star and story register satisfactorily. The opening overture is "Aida" and the ever popular selections from this opera prove highly appealing. The Rivoli pictorial which follows concludes with a colored picture entitled, "The Bubble," which shows a Miss Desha rendering a fanciful dance. Immediately after this is over the screen is raised and Miss Desha appears in person rendering the same number. The novelty of this makes a big hit. The feature follows and at its conclusion Betty Anderson renders "The Sweetest Story Ever Told," a particularly appropriate vocal number for this position. A new Mack Sennett comedy, "Let 'Er Go," contains tricks and gags that register big. The concluding organ solo is "Finale in E Flat."

Answering various statements directed against myself, please publish these facts. There are three national conventions of exhibitors called for Cleveland, June 8, 9, 10 and 11, to wit: Theater Owners Association by Cohen, Independent Picture Exhibitors caled together by Patterson, and the old National League by Alfred Black. Cohen's organization does not agree with the other two regarding organization policies, therefore, I have suggested that each organization be given one day and all go as one body to all three meetings and on the last day of convention eliminate the three and all join together into one big permanent organization.

Independents want one day to report on their movement to force all producers out of theater business. The old league after ten years of service is entitled to consideration. These propositions have been wired to Mr. Lustig, Chairman of Cleve-

F. P. Income Jumps

Quarterly Report Shows Increase of $101,760 Over 1919 Period

The net income of Famous Players-Lasky Corp. for the three-month period ending March 31 increased $101,760 over the corresponding period last year, according to a quarterly report issued by the company.

Net profits, after all expenses and allowance for film exhaustion and Federal taxes had been subtracted totaled $1,058,565, which is equal to $4.28 a share earned on the 214,247 shares of common stock, no par value, out standing.

These figures compare with $956,805, which was the net profit in the same period of 1919. These figures, however, do not include Federal taxes and are equal to $5.70 earned for each share of stock on the market at that time in 1919, which totaled 167,567.

The gross income for the three months' period of 1920 totaled $7,517,172, which shows an increase of $1,616,500 over the gross in the same period of last year.

None of the above figures include the profits or losses of wholly or partially owned subsidiary corporations.

land Exhibitors with request for a positive reply, but he gives only evasive answers, therefore, the presumption is they are playing politics. Lustig, Bullock, Van Praag and Cohen are leaders of theater owners and expect to control all convention meetings in order to put over their movement which, as per their contract, is a film advertising scheme that allows them to censor all pictures and control the industrial film business. Last year they bolted the St. Louis National Convention and have belittled all organization activities except their own during the past year. I predict that they will bolt this year again. Last year they were voted down two hundred to seven. They did not submit to a majority last year. Will they this year? They refuse to meet the officers of old organization at Utica for a conciliation. These are simple cold facts and while they have as much right to go into the film business as anyone else it is my belief that we will never have a national organization worth while unless it is founded on broad principles without any money making schemes. We have tried expositions, balls, insurance schemes, running trade journals and this film advertising scheme will bring us grief an ddisaster same as heretofore. There are so many angles to this industry and so many wheels in wheels that the right kind of national organization must be entirely free from any money making schemes and supported entirely by cash dues sufficient to function on a big scale. It must be as impartial as the supreme court and its principles as broad as the Constitution of our country and all must abide by the majority rule. It must help the unfortunate exhibitor, cooperate with the fair producer and battle with the unfair producer. It should not be controlled by one man or any cooperative booking schemes because all of these things are uncertain. The best organizations are those that you pay out your cash money. For example, the government by taxes the church, the lodge, the chamber of commerce by cash. I have been so ill with tonsilitis that unless I improve rapidly I will not be able to be at Cleveland. My hope is that every exhibitor will go to Cleveland and fight for the right kind of national organization because you won't get it in any other way. Stay with the meeting and abide with the majority.

Young War Uptown

There is a merry party under way in the Fort Washington district of town. Marcus Loew now owns the Rio, formerly operated by David Picker. Loew has cut prices to 11 and 22 cents at night and 11 cents during the day.

A near-by theater is considerably worried and the owner has indicated this by discharging his house manager because he 'wasn't big enough to combat Loew."

W. W.'s Idea

W. W. Hodkinson has published for free distribution to exhibitors a pamphlet which he calls "An Appeal to Common Sense." The pamphlet deals with present conditions in the industry. Hodkinson's contention is that many of the evils which now beset motion picture theater owners arise from the fact that the same financial interests control producing and distribution.

This means, Hodkinson says, that under the system now followed by the producer-distributor all the picture failures are charged as a debit against the exhibitor, thereby saddling on him the cost of unfortunate experiments. An independent distributing agency forcing the producer to bear the cost of failures on his own shoulders is one of the remedies proposed by Hodkinson.

Maigne Returns

Charles Maigne has returned to New York from the coast, where he directed "The Fighting Chance." He is awaiting the arrival of Thomas Meighan, whom he will direct in "The Frontier of the Stars."

Shoot Pictures of Pageant

Harry Lee, who assisted Herbert Brenon when he made "The Daughter of the Gods" with Annette Kellerman, has an important role in the Guy Empey production, "Oil."

all during the week as to just what was accomplished in the way of new plans during the convention at the Commodore. By next week, it is expected, that a complete announcement will be made of the new Fox plans which are understood to embrace an ambitious scheme of expansion.

Yesterday the field force went to Fox's Academy of Music where Hampton del Ruth's eight reel comedy was slipped in during the regular show to see how the public would take to it. The picture was shown just once and then taken right out of the show again. It will be released in the fall as a special production.

Last night the men were guests of "Bill" Fox at Murray's at a beefsteak dinner. Today there will be two showings, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon, of completed Fox productions at Aeolian Hall. In the evening the force will see Ed Wynn's Carnival and after that go to the Midnight Frolic. Saturday morning will see the final session and the farewells.

Novelties at New Grauman Theater

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Here is what Sid Grauman says regarding his proposed Hollywood theater:

"In the architecture the oriental idea will predominate. The house will be set in a picturesque garden-like inclosure, with electric fountains and statuary as ornamental features.

"In front of the theater entrance there will be a space of 40 to 50 feet which the exterior adornment will occupy. The garden effect will be continued around either side of the building, over a seventeen-foot width.

"One of the most striking arrangements will be that made in the tower of the theater. We will import French searchlights sending out shafts of different colors. These will be used to announce the start of the performances. For instance, a green light will indicate that the next entertainment will begin in say 15 minutes, and then a red light will make apparent the actual starting of the show. I am informed that these colored searchlights will carry a distance of 35 miles.

"The theater will have a 35-piece orchestra in all probability.

"The bill will be changed twice weekly, and we will specialize in pre-release pictures."

By McELLIOTT.

Will Rogers is in a fair way to rival the adored William S. Hart, I'm thinking. Like Hart, he is an incoherent wooer, a shy and shambling greatheart of the open country. His tongue is in his cheek oftener, though, and his eye is more roguish. He is given to the sly wink rather than the downcast glance with which the other actor is wont to adorn his playing. William S. is the Great Dane, so to speak, of pictures, and Rogers the no less pathetic but much more mischievous Scotch terrier (if both of them will forgive the doggy metaphor).

"Jes' Call Me Jim" is a good story, narrated cleverly and with commendable dispatch. It might have been written for the star, so easily does he fit into the role of honest woodsman who befriends an injured comrade and outwits the plotters of the piece.

A gauche and worthless suitor, in the end he finds happiness with Keziah Butterworth, whom he's been courting in John Alden fashion for some time. Irene Rich, as the adored one, is pretty and fresh as a clove pink, and wholesome as a breeze from some one's old-fashioned garden. You'll like her, I'm sure, just as you'll like that cunning wee tad, Jimmy Rogers, who stumbles stubbily through the picture.

"Jes' Call Me Jim," I'm trying to tell you, is worth while. Don't s'pose all of you will agree with me, but then, as the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina, you can't please all of the people all of the time!

Will Rogers and Son Appear in "Jes' Call Me Jim"

WILL ROGERS of lariat throwing fame appears on the Strand screen this week in an amusing and well-made film titled "Jes Call Me Jim." His own smal son, a cunning lad who answer to the name of Jim, tramp sturdily through the story.

ROGERS MAKES HIT IN NEWEST FILM

"Call Me Jim" Is Excellent Combination of Humor and Pathos.

IS FEATURE AT THE STRAND

By AGNES SMITH.

It is Will Rogers in "Jes' Call Me Jim" at the Strand this week. The picture confirms a suspicion that we have had for a long time—that Rogers is our favorite screen actor. At first we thought I liked him because it was such a re- to see a homely hero.

"Jes' Call Me Jim" is better than ibilo" and that means that it is a real ture. It has one scene that is as good as the part in "The Miracle Man" where the crippled boy is healed. The actors are Rogers and his little son, Jimmie. The boy prays for the life of his screen father. While we dislike praying children in motion pictures, this particular scene is so beautifully acted by Rogers and Jimmie and so finely directed by Clarence Badger that it misses any touch of sentimentality. Don't take our word for it, but go to the Strand and watch the girl ushers cry over it. And from the way the audience behaved, it would seem that Rogers is going to be a regular David Warfield.

However, there is a lot of humor in "Jes' Call Me Jim." And it has a good story. Rogers's romance with the village milliner is amusingly told. He spends his money on feminine hats, although he is a lone bachelor with no one to give them to. The subtitles, too, contain plenty of shrewd humor.

The combination of an engrossing story and Rogers's kindly sincerity makes "Jes' Call Me Jim" an ideal picture for those who are a little tired of artificiality, pretentiousness and bunk. Next to the star and his son, the best acting is done by Raymond Hatton. The picture is released by Goldwyn.

Will Rogers at the Strand and "The Sea Wolf" at the Rialto

There is fun enough for three motion picture productions in the Will Rogers film called "Jes' Call Me Jim," at the Strand Theater this week. It shows Mr. Rogers in the rôle of Jim Fenton, a happy-go-lucky hunter and trapper, who is in love with the village milliner, played by Irene Rich. A friend of Jim, Paul Benedict, is placed in an insane asylum through a conspiracy perpetrated by influential citizens, who seek to obtain the right to Benedict's invention. Jim hears of his friend's predicament through the milliner, who has taken charge of Paul's son, Harry, portrayed by Mr. Rogers's young son. Jim, confronted by many difficulties, obtains the release of his friend and eventually wins the pretty milliner, but not until the star has found means through which to speak no fewer than a score of his own brand of remarks on things in general, each with an O. Henry "punch" that brings roars from the audience.

Mr. Rogers no doubt will do much more in pictures. His rugged face and his ability to express himself by facial twists make him a good camera subject. These facts, combined with his own inimitable philosophy and witticisms, go to make of him one of the few real humorists of the screen today.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

We've had to wait a few months for Will Rogers to give us another "Jubilo" but when you see "Jes' Call Me Jim" you'll say it was worth the waiting. And at that, from some angles "Jes' Call Me Jim" will have even bigger appeal than its predecessor because of its wonderfully human appeal, its real pathos and quaint humor. Will Rogers in his portrayal of the awkward Jim Fenton is an entertainment in himself, but little Jimmie Rogers is an affectionate youngster and the one bit that he plays alone, where he goes out among the big redwood trees with just a few rays of sun shining through and prays that his father will recover, sure will get them.

Careful direction has also helped to make the picture what it is. There are many touches, though they don't mean much of themselves, that strike a genuine note of humor, pathos, or whatever the case may be. For instance, Will has a sort of "hankerin' after" the village milliner. In fact he is a frequent customer, each time buying a hat for his mother. When the milliner remarks upon the number of hats he has bought he says: "Yes, mother is very hard on hats. This is her eighth this season." There is no mother at all and later the hats are found in Will's cabin.

This is only one of the many amusing bits. There are many more. Jim Fenton is just a happy-go-lucky fellow who lives alone "up the river." On one of his visits to the village he learns from Miss Butterworth, the milliner, that his pal Paul Benedict is dying in the poorhouse.

Miss Butterworth, who is taking care of Paul's motherless son, tells Jim that she has an idea that Mr. Belcher, one of the most prominent men in "Seven Oaks," is responsible for Paul's condition. Jim decides upon immediate action. That night he breaks into the poorhouse and takes Paul away to his place up the river, where he gradually recovers. Later Jim goes to Belcher and claims the reward offered for the missing Paul, dead or alive.

He takes Belcher to his place and shows him a grave. Belcher is satisfied that Paul is dead, but a storm necessitates his spending the night in the cabin. This gives Jim another idea. He has Paul appear before Belcher during the night. The fright causes him to confess that he defrauded Paul. The evidence is later used against Belcher and everything turns out right. All this time Jim has believed Miss Butterworth in love with Paul, but the realzation that she is in love wih him works out very prettily.

Among those in the cast are Irene Rich, Lionel Belmore, Bert Sprotee, Nick Cogley and Sydney De Grey.

You Won't Go Wrong If You Book Will Rogers' Latest

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is so good that all those who will want to see it won't be able to get in your house in one night. It's as good, if not better than "Jubilo." Just because it's different and because the star is different, they'll like it. It's such a relief to get away from the stereotyped "he, she and the other woman" type of picture and a few other hackneyed ideas that are done over and over again. "Jes' Call Me Jim" is as refreshing as sunshine after rain, and if it doesn't strike photoplay audiences that way, they're not the right kind of audiences.

Just assure your folks that you are going to show a picture with a genuine human appeal. Tell them about Will Rogers and his son Jimmie. Remind them of "Jubilo" and those that saw it will want to see "Jes' Call Me Jim" when you link it up with "Jubilo." There's a song called "Jubilo" that the Strand orchestra played when "Jubilo" was being shown. It was revived for "Jes' Call Me Jim." The tune seems to fit right in with the kind of pictures Will Rogers plays.

INTERIORS.....Unusually fine and lavish sets
DETAIL.....Confusion of day and night in one place should be remedied.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Convent girl takes vow to marry man in order to save his soul
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 7,000 feet

Expense and efforts along artistic lines have not been spared in the production of "For the Soul of Rafael" and at that the atmosphere of old Southern California, lavish settings and some rather good acting mong those in the supporting cast, together with the work of Miss Young, help to bring the picture up considerably despite the serious drawback of a weak and familiar story.

The picture is really divided into two sequences; the convent girl who loses her lover and takes a vow to her guardian to marry her son and save his soul, and the second part where the lover returns, but the unhappy woman, and the audience, await the death of the husband to make way for the lovers' reunion.

The bit about the Indian ring which is supposed to have some sort of a mating power is never really made clear, nor is the entrance of the Indian sequence, except that it serves as a means of having the heroine meet the hero.

Dona Luisa, guardian of Marta, the convent girl, has long planned the marriage of Marta and her wayward son Rafael. But Marta has a lover, Keith. Dona Luisa, fearing an obstacle to her desire, separates the two by telling Keith that Marta has become a nun, whereupon he rides away.

The girl and her guardian arrive at the home of Rafael early in the morning just at the close of Rafael's last night of revelry—his last bachelor party. Keith is a guest at the house, but it is not until after Mara has accepted the vow of the dying Dona Luisa to marry Rafael and the ceremony is over that she learns of the deception.

The remainder of the picture has to do with the escapades of Rafael and his outlaw cousin, El Capitan, whom he has never seen but who is constantly in company with him in the guise of a padre. Rafael is planning to elope with Keith's widowed sister, but she's a bit of a "gold-digger" and refuses to leave until she has every piece of Marta's jewelry. The delay results in Marta discovering the plan and snatching the jewel case just as Rafael reappears on the scene. Then Capitan arrives and discloses his identity. There is a fight in which Rafael is killed.

Lavish Production and Star's Performance May Satisfy

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As far as production is concerned you are safe in offering them a well made and an atmospherically artistic picture in "For the Soul of Rafael." It has been produced on a large and lavish scale, many beautiful and realistic settings being employed. Admirers of the star will undoubtedly be satisfied with this notwithstanding the story's frailty. Tell them it's a story laid in Southern California many years ago when its Mexican and Spanish inhabitants transformed it into an almost foreign colony. For the bookworms mention Marah Ellis Ryan as the author if this and recall her "Told in the Hills" and "The Bond Woman."

You can say that expense has not been spared in making a picture good to look at. The players in support of the star have done some good work which you can talk about if necessary. The following could be used: "Marta, the convent girl, took an oath to marry and save a man's soul. See how she fulfills her oath, all for 'The Soul of Rafael.'" Or, "See Clara Kimball Young in a role quite different from any she has had of late. Her most recent production, 'For the Soul of Rafael,' is being shown at the.....theater."

AS A WHOLE.....This theme required a better imagination and more expert technical work than are evidenced here.
STORY ..... Fairly good
DIRECTION.....Poor in handling players; idea of Mars likely to strike most as funny.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fair
LIGHTINGS.....Good at times
CAMERA WORK .....Fair
PLAYERS.....Leading man too posey; leading woman acts as if in a daze.
EXTERIORS.....Stamp the picture as of foreign make; some pretty shots.
INTERIORS.....Satisfactory except interior of airship is too big for the exterior.
DETAIL.....None of consequence
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Explorer's trip to Mars and a romance with a Martian lady.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,900 feet

Employing the possibility of a trip to Mars as a theme, some one with the imagination of Jules Verne and the technical ability of Thomas H. Ince's producing staff might well have made an entertaining and colorful picture. The timeliness of the idea is immediately apparent. The producer could have based his picture on the reports of what Martians are probably like as furnished by leading astrologers and scientists of the day.

The picture, produced in Italy, has a timely title but little else to commend it.

To the producer Mars is a sort of heaven, or at least a place where the long waited earthly millenium has been attained. On Mars no one works, no one quarrels, everyone wears nice white robes and they talk in "the language of the soul." How the Italians who go there are able to understand this language is one of the many unexplained points of the story.

The opening shows a professor who is sure that Mars is inhabited. His son and daughter's fiance believe it also, believe it enough to collect a crew and pilot an airship all the way to that distant planet. When they get there, after experiencing some trouble with a mutinous crew that wanted to turn around and get back to earth, all the Martians are out waiting for them and greet them with much bowing and scraping.

The professor's son thereupon embarks on romance with the daughter of the chief Elder of the Martians and there is a lot of rather foolish dancing and reference to Grottos of Love and Rivers of Eternity introduced that doesn't get over very well. Anyway the daughter of the Elder walks around as if in a daze, leading the earthly hero by the hand, and finally she gets in the ship and sails back to earth with them.

The airship in which the trip is made is a pretty little thing over which most airmen will be likely to express fears when it embarks on its journey into the unknown. It doesn't look as if it could stand a perfectly good earthly air storm, let alone the few million miles of the jaunt to Mars.

"A TRIP TO MARS"
Tower Film Corp.

The title of this may attract a good many people. Most of us would like to see what a really imaginative producer could do with a trip to Mars as the basis of an adventure picture. Probably no such effort would be taken altogether seriously, but at least the idea affords opportunities for unusual color and wondrous adventure that might have been very convincing.

But it is doubtful whether the picture here presented under the title will do any more than make people laugh at it. The very easily moved may take some small stock in it and be impressed by the director's idea of Mars, but most fans are going to be pretty much amused at the various piece of ridiculousness perpetrated.

A Trifle Better Than the Average Program Offering

Harry T. Morey in
"THE SEA RIDER"

DIRECTOR.....Edwin L. Hollywood
AUTHOR .....Harry Ditmars
SCENARIO BY.....Fred Schaefer
CAMERAMAN .....Bill McCoy
AS A WHOLE.....Satisfactory offering that has main appeal in sea atmosphere; well suited to personality of star.
STORY.....Not wholly original idea, but some new twists and careful handling of material gets it over very well.
DIRECTION.....Managed to make good once started, though opening dragged a trifle.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Fair
CAMERA WORK.....All right
STAR.....Pleasing in role of sea captain
SUPPORT ..... Capable
EXTERIORS.....Mostly aboard freight vessel; realistic
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL.....Few minor faults, not serious
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Two brothers, one good, the other bad, both in love with the same girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,272 feet

There's just a bit of "The Sea Wolf" about "The Sea Raider" in that both men rule their respective vessels with the power of a king and the violence of a tyrant. On the other hand, the two captains are distinct personalities inasmuch as a prologue provides the cause for "The Sea Raider's intolerance, and that cause—a woman.

Harry Morey's latest picture doesn't contain anything startlingly new in the way of an idea, but a splendid sea atmosphere together with some carefully handled "touches" and a well balanced cast, make it a first rate bit of entertainment. Coincident plays a part in the story, but the director has managed to handle these incidents so that they are not liable to cause any particular comment.

They aim to gain sympathy for "The Sea Raider," who has been discarded in favor of his younger brother and to a certain extent, one is inclined to feel sorry for him. However, if Alice Calhoun, as the girl in the case, had affected more enthusiasm over her new found love for the Sea Raider's younger brother, more sympathy would have been felt for Morey. As it is, the girl acts as though she is merely carrying out the requirement of the scenario. Outside of a few admiring glances at Webster Campbell, the younger brother, there is nothing to indicate that she loves him.

When the old father dies, Harry provides a new home for his wife to be and her mother and two children. Upon his return from a voyage he finds that the girl belongs to his brother. He buys the Trenton and leaves the port. As far as the audience is concerned, Alice and Campbell drop out of the story for the time being, at least.

Some time later while anchored in New York harbor, Morey, standing on the deck of his boat, sees a young woman about to jump into the water. He calls to her and then goes to her. She tells a story similar to his own experience and thereby gains his sympathy. He takes her aboard the Trenton and finally agrees to let her spend the night when she insists that she has no place to go.

A few days pass and still the girl stays on. When the Trenton has taken on her load of explosives, Morey insists that the girl go ashore. Before the boat sails, however, Morey is confronted again by Campbell, who has left Alice and drifted from bad to worse. He is taken aboard. Soon the girl is discovered hiding on the boat. She and Campbell meet and Morey discovers that Campbell is the cause of her downfall. There is a struggle and the explosives catch fire. Morey and the girl escape before the Trenton blows up while the brother is drowned.

Invite Them to See Morey in a Role Out of the Ordinaray

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are after a good program picture, not a whirlwind nor a specially unusual production, "The Sea Raider" should fit right in. It's not a wonder of a story, but with a fine sea atmosphere and Harry Morey's personality and good work on the part of his supporting company, you will nt be likely to have any difficulty in satisfying the majority.

You can appeal to both the men and the women. For the men work from the angle of the sea atmosphere and for the women tell them of the hero's delusion and the ingratitude of one he had befriended. Use these lines: "If you had even provided a new home for the girl you were to marry and suddenly found she was in love with your brother, what would you do? See what Harry Morey does in 'The Sea Raider,' a tale of the sea, at the.....theater."

Good Idea Unable to Stand Up Against Avalanche of Padding

Seena Owen in
"THE HOUSE OF TOYS"
American-Pathe

DIRECTOR ..... George Cox
AUTHOR .....Henry Russell Miller
SCENARIO BY.....Daniel F. Whitcomb
CAMERAMAN .....Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Human little idea almost buried by avalanche of padding.
STORY.....Pretty; real feeling in its theme
DIRECTION.....Wasted hundreds of feet on meaningless scenes and relegated real action to subtitles.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS .....All very good
CAMERA WORK..... Satisfactory
STAR.....Wears extravagant clothes but doesn't do much with her few opportunities.
SUPPORT ..... Average
EXTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
INTERIORS ..... Same
DETAIL.....In effort to inject realistic detail director has run afoul of padding.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Deals with hard working husband and butterfly wife from new angle.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 0,000 feet

Really this picture looks as if it never went near the cutting room. The man in the theater seat might well hazard he guess that everything the direcor shot had been used. As a result the human little idea contained in the story is almost completely buried by this avalanche of padding. There are scenes seemingly interminable in which characters walk from room to room without registering anything. There are profuse close-ups parcelled out to all the players apparently at random that are totally unnecessary in the telling of the story.

On the other hand, when it comes to picturing the events of real consequence that are part of the story the director has against him various errors of omission. These events are given over to the mercies of the subtitles. It is entirely probable that these subtitles, minus the pictured action, would tell the complete story in themselves.

David, a young architect, marries Shirley, ward of her wealthy aunt, against the severe old lady's advice to wait until his fortune is made. After three or four years the couple have a child and a heap of debts while a general air of discontent pervades their home. The upshot of it is that Shirley goes back to live with her aunt while David secures work in the office of Radbourne, an old and kindly architect.

Here he works for a while with all hope gone. Then Esther, Radbourne's secretary, takes him in hand and tells him that he should have hope, that his mental ills should not triumph over his knowledge of his ability to succeed. And on this theory, put into practice, David makes a bright start on the upward path. Esther, though she loves him, bids him go back to his wife and even assists in effecting their reconciliation. The most moving moment in the picture is the scene between the two women, Shirley embarrassed because of her neglect of her husband in his hours of need, Esther withholding her deep feeling for David because of her desire to do the right thing.

Seena Owen hasn't many opportunities in the role of Shirley and makes small use of those she has. However, her appearances are marked by a lavish display of clothes. Pell Trenton is rather negative as David. Helen Jerome Eddy is a convincing and appealing Esther, while George Hernandez has a congenial character role.

Could Still Be Made Into Human Little Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Photoplay patrons aren't exorbitant in their demands for action in their entertainment. Some pictures, containing very little physical action, have been successful because of the drama that rises from plain truths and human characters. Such a picture "The House of Toys" might easily have been had it received skilful as well as appreciative treatment. But in its present state it will likely prove wearisome to the great majority of people.

Of course there is the road of "cutting and editing" open to the producers. If they chose they could make their picture into one that would be at least pleasing. And if such was their course the exhibitor might well write "The House of Toys" on his books as a feature to advertise as "human and appealing" and as "a stirring page from real life."

"EMMA DUNN is as finely human in the pictured 'OLD LADY 31' as she was in thc play."

in Exhibitor's Trade Review

EMMA DUNN'S screen debut in the character of Angle Rose, which she created upon the stage, bids fair to make her equally well beloved as a star of the silent drama. Her work in the film is the very acme of art, a touching impersonation so delightfully natural and appealing that it is likely to linger long in the memory of all beholders.

Personality of Star Puts This Over Nicely

Shirley Mason in
"LOVE'S HARVEST"
Fox

DIRECTOR.....Howard M. Mitchell
AUTHOR.....Pearl Doles Bell
SCENARIO BY.....Isabel Johnston
CAMERAMAN .....George Schneiderman
AS A WHOLE.....Particularly suitable vehicle for star; pleasing comedy drama.
STORY.....Adapted from Pearl Doles Bell's "The Harvest"; makes satisfactory screen material
DIRECTION.....Handles material very well, also players; maintains average interest throughout.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Clear
CAMERA WORK..... Ordinary
STAR.....Sure to please; her personality alone should insure the picture getting over.
SUPPORT.....Raymond McKee an appealing lover; a wonder of a dog deserves a share of praise
EXTERIORS ..... Appropriate
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL.....Entirely too many sub-titles
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

In "Love's Harvest," an adaptation of the story by Pearl Doles Bell, the Fox organization made an appropriate selection, for the vivacious Miss Shirley is surely a pleasing bit of "girlie girl" in the role of Jane Day. About the most important in support of the star is Buddie, the dog. Buddie shows signs of becoming quite an actor and at any rate his performance in "Love's Harvest" goes a good ways towards providing the entertainment that will be derived from the picture.

Mrs. Bell has written a sympathetic story of the little orphan girl Jane and until close to the end will gain the sympathy of the audience, but there is one thing that's a shade off color. After adopting the little orphan and sending her abroad o have her voice cultivated, the benefactor proposes to the child. Of course when he gives up the idea and makes her promise to marry the man she loves, this offers a chance to show the man's big heartedness. But the idea of him thinking of marrying Shirley, even though she has grown two years older, isn't altogether pleasing.

Edwin Booth Tilton as Allen Hamilton, the benefactor, is sincere in his portrayal, and Lilie Leslie as his sister Eleanor, is merely a figurehead. Incidentally, there is considerably too much display of affection between Miss Leslie and Mr. Tilton, as brother and sister, to be natural. They introduce a suitor of Eleanor's, but he might just as well have been left out for he never reappears.

The director has handled the production in an appreciable manner and the accuracy of the street scene in Paris is noticeable. The picture is presenting something different in the way of sub-titles by presenting the last few words of each sub-title in immense big letters, following the first part of the title. The idea doesn't prove effective and "Love's Harvest" would stand re-titling.

When Jane Day's father died he willed everything to a rich young nephew, Jim Atherton. "Everything" included Jane. Jim came for the little orphan, bringing with him his fiancee who plucked the only rose that was on the bush that Jane was coaxing to grow. She would not live with such people so took Buddie and ran away. With Buddie's tricks and her singing she hoped to secure a place on the stage.

Allen Hamilton, theatrical manager, became interested in the little girl and took her to his home. Hamilton grew very fond of his little protege and sent her to France with his sister to have her voice cultivated. In Paris she met Jim Atherton, who had never given up the search for the Rose Bush girl, for he found he had fallen in love with her.

Tell Them They'll Like Shirley and Her Dog. They Should

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is the third of Miss Mason's pictures for the Fox organization. For the benefit of those of your patrons who saw her in "Her Elephant Man" tell them that "Love's Harvest" is by the same author, Pearl Doles Bell. Even though there are some parts of the story that may not strike them just right, the personality the the star and the very pleasing performance which she gives in "Love's Harvest," together with the tricks of a clever and well trained dog, are sure to provide enough amusement to head off complaints from any other angle.

You can promise them they'll like Shirley as the little orphan Jane who ran away from home and tried to go on the stage with her dog. The Fox company can furnish you with some attractive stills of Shirley and the dog. For catchlines try: "If the man who had given you your only chance in life wanted you to marry him and you were in love with another, what would you do? See who makes the sacrifice in "Love's Harvest."

Deeply Human and Appealing Picture Dealing With Real Characters

Alice Joyce in
"DOLLARS AND THE WOMAN"

DIRECTOR .....George Terwilliger
AUTHOR.....Albert Payson Terhune
SCENARIO BY.....Lucien Hubbard
CAMERAMAN .....Joseph Shelderfer
AS A WHOLE.....Simple, human and appealing development of slightly different eternal triangle theme.
STRY.....Very consistently told—characters excellently drawn—an unusual dramatic climax DIRECTION.....Fine distinctive touches crop up throughout—events pictured naturally and in realistic mood they were written.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Varying from good to poor
CAMERA WORK..... Fair
LIGHTINGS.....Generally not sharp enough, but effects are realistic.
STAR.....Plays skilfully and is very appealing
SUPPORT.....Robert Gordon and Crauford Kent well cast and give life to real characters.
EXTERIORS ..... Few used
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL.....Director's touches serve to bring out story's realism to fine degree.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Deals with circumstances into which wife is precipitated by selfish and jealous husband.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,052 feet

Albert Payson Terhune writes very realistically in his magazine stories and "Dollars and the Woman" is not the least of his long string of successes. This story which deals with the eternal triangle in something of an unusual way contained no high melodramatics or sensationalism or ranting characters. It is something of a real bit of life; simple, human and appealing.

And this story has received the most careful and sympathetic treatment at the hands of Director Terwilliger. Throughout the five reels there crop up distinctive little touches and scenes showing a most careful attention to realism that stamp the picture as one quite splendidly directed. That it constantly holds the attention through its reality and that it often profoundly stirs the emotions through its simple forces are facts that should serve to bring it to the attention of all exhibitors.

The married couple in the case are the Hillyers. Dan, selfish, jealous and somewhat thoughtless, but withal deeply in love with Madge. And Madge, always sacrificing, stinting and suffering that Dan may succeed. Dan has perfected an invention to sell which he must make a trip west. Though there is an addition to the family expected shortly Madge goes to the bank and draws her savings for Dan. She is robbed of them and, in despair, goes to Crewe, wealthy and formerly her suitor, who replaces the money.

The consequences which this lead to form sequences of real power and stirring appeal. It is a pleasure to record that Crewe fails to do the conventional villainous trick but instead is really the means of waking Dan to a realization of his own selfishness and the great debt he owes his wife.

The characters are all realistically drawn and very well handled and played. And praise should be equally divided between Alice Joyce and Robert Gordon as the Hillyers and Crauford Kent as Crewe. All three give of their best.

The subtitles in this are generally very good, those referring to the coming of the baby being particularly delicately worded. Once in a while one that is too obviously expository is introduced, but in the main they are fitting.

Has a Box Office Value Commensurate With Its Appeal

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Completely satisfied audiences should, and doubtless will, be the order of things wherever "Dollars and the Woman" is shown. Those exhibitors who are ever on the outlook for a picture containing a big feminine appeal should pay particular attention to it. It is this type of story that Terhune usually writes. He knows his magazine public thoroughly and as a lonsequence he knows his picture public. And certainly both men and women are going to recognize the human characters of this picture and be moved by the forces that move them.

Nor is "Dollars and the Woman" any mean advertising bet. In the first place there is its interest-awakening title. There is the name of the author, one of the most well known of present day writers. There is Alice Joyce and there are the two leading men, both of whom are wide and favorably known. With all this drawing force "Dollars and the Woman" should play to the large audiences that its contents to justly deserve.

Many Lavish Sets and Much Cody Love

SCENARIO BY.....Not credited
CAMERAMAN .....Joseph Dubray
AS A WHOLE.....Not much to this except elaborate sets and week-end party gayeties.

DIRECTION.....Gave all the attention to elaborating on settings.

INTERIORS ..... Lavish sets
DETAIL .....Ordinary attention
CHARACTER OF STORY.....He-vamp who has more women than he can handle.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,200 feet

If there ever was anything of a story to what they blame George Barr McCutcheon for, they've used very little of it in making the picture. One reel would have sufficed to tell the tale. But those responsible had the making of a feaure on their hands and features must have at least five reels to come under that heading. The direction is not the best, the entire attention and effort being given to providing artistic settings and presenting attractive house parties, one of which introduces a brand new idea. Some of the guests are attired in evening costumes while others wear bathing suits and sport around in the pool which is part of the set.

The story is so slight that it is necessary to follow practically every scene with a title. They have attempted to gain sympathy for the star by reminding the audiences at frequent intervals of his devotion to his mother, though this is only apparent in the titles. Then to make you feel real sorry for him, once more Western Union plays a heavy part and announces the death of the mother, whereupon you are supposed to sympathize with the hero as the closing fade-out shows him walking away, head downcast.

Almost the entire picture is taken up with the social gatherings attended by "The Butterfly Man." The opening reel has him the center of attraction at a garden fete where he is very much sought after by all the ladies present. However, Louise Lovely happens to be the luckiest. He escorts her home. The next event is a dinner given by another of his admirers, a Mrs. Trend, with whom he is carrying on a flirtation much to the disgust of everybody, her husband included.

The third and most elaborate event is the Rose Cotillion where Lew reaches the height of his vamping in a daring dance with Mrs. Trend, the results of which indirectly cause him to lose the hand of the wealthy Louise, whose money he had hoped to marry. But Lew manages to square himself in the eyes of Mr. Trend by rescuing his little daughter when a basket suspended from the ceiling from which she is strewing flowers, catches fire. The next morning comes the news of his mother's death and everybody, including the girl who had jilted him, feels sorry for "The Butterfly Man."

Center on Cody and Forget Story

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Lew Cody's art of love making and his tricks as a he-vamper will suit the younger set but may not receive a very welcome reception from the older and more serious minded members of your audiences. And even at that it's a question whether or not his particular talents will continue to please those who do like his work if he isn't supplied with more substantial story material. There isn't much of it in "The Butterfly Man," so don't make promises on this score. Base the attraction on the elaborate social functions shown in the picture.

In "The Beloved Cheater" there was a story to talk about, so if you showed it refer to it in announcing "The Butterfly Man." It may help. For catchlines use: "Is it always the woman who is the butterfly? See the male of the species at the blank theater." Or, "He made some of them glad, he made some of them sad, but he made none of them bad. See 'The Butterfly Man.'"

"SHERRY"
Edgar Lewis Productions-Pathe

DIRECTOR ..... Edgar Lewis
AUTHOR .....George Barr McCutcheon
SCENARIO BY..... Frances Guihan
CAMERAMAN .....Edward C. Earle
AS A WHOLE.....Too much mystery in this, while theme of reforming drunkard is passe.
STORY.....Not compact enough to be dramatic; action is mystifying without arousing suspense.
DIRECTION.....Hasn't been able to overcome faults in plots and scenario.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Realistic
CAMERA WORK..... Very good
LEADING PLAYERS.....Pat O'Malley hasn't enough to do to draw clear character; Lillian Hall too "cute" to appeal.
SUPPORT ..... Fair
EXTERIORS .....Satisfactory small town stuff
INTERIORS ..... Suitable
DETAIL.....Much too much of it
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Reformed drunkard solves mystery of miser's unhappy marriage and wins love of pretty girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,150 feet

"Sherry" is the story of a town drunkard who reforms after a thousand feet of tipsy business on the sidewalks, who solves an exceedingly mysterious mystery existing in the household of an alleged miser who hasn't exchanged words with his wife for twelve years, and who finally wins the love of a pretty little girl who had laughed at him in his drinking days.

In its various embellishments and details as pictured by Edgar Lewis it is no more substantial than the above outline. "Sherry" is not compact enough to be dramatic, it suffers from padding and it proves nothing definite.

After Sherry has been shown in a state of semi-intoxication for a full reel he decides to reform. His meeting with Morna O'Brien takes up a good deal of space, during which nothing further develops than the planting of their mutual admiration. Later Sherry gets a job as guardian and protector of Andrew Gilmn, purported to be the town miser, who has exchanged no words with his hard old wife for twelve years.

Much mystery is established about Gilman and his wife. Entirely too much. The action concerning them becomes exasperating mystifying as the footage passes on. And in the end it develops that Mrs. Gilman's son, a scapegrace, had caused the breach. The son returns to obtain money. Gilman gives it to him. Sherry attacks him as he is leaving the house. The son fires wild and kills his mother and then goes to death in a high jump from a window.

Of course Sherry had been misrepresented in the eyes of Morna by the villain. He had told her that Sherry had been backsliding. A kindly old policeman sets Morna aright on the matter and the happy ending clinch follows.

Director Lewis hasn't welded these various phases of the action together in an interesting fashion. He has run into padding in a too zealous desire to make his work picturesque with various details and further his way of chopping divers essential scenes just before their climaxes is disappointing.

Pat O'Malley is Sherry, but isn't able to define a sympathetic character because of lack of real material. Lillian Hall's efforts to be cute as Morna are too obvious. Harry Spingler, Maggie Halloway Fisher, Richard Cummings, Alfred Fisher, Will Jeffries and Scott Mcee are inclined to overact at times.

Name of Author Will Draw and Production May Find Some Favor

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

While it has been proven under present conditions both on screen and stage that themes dealing with the man fighting a craving for liquor usually court something close to derision in big cities, there are no doubt certain localites where such a story wll carry an extensive appeal. While "Sherry" is not up to the standard that Edgar Lewis has set in other of his independent productions, it is probable that the central character will attract favorable attention in these communities.

If you have signed up for the production already it would be well to concentrate on the popularity of the author, together with the producer's reputation. These names will draw to a certain extent. It would not be policy to boost the picture in superlatives if you do run it. Some such line as "A story of the small town derelict who took up the battle against an inherent weakness and won" might be used to outline the character of the production.

Some Short Reels

"Modern Centaurs"—Educational

Feats of horsemanship, remarkable in most cases, and where they are not remarkable, executed with unusual ease and grace, make up this Educational reel. The skilled riders perched on their lithe ponies go through a series of stunts, leaping over streams, struggling up and down inclines, being dipped in ponds and taking occasional spills in a manner that thrills. Many of the feats are repeated, and this does not improve the offering. The camera work in this is especially good, the man who manipulated the crank having filmed the cavalrymen in fine style. On the other hand, insufficient light tended to detract from the effectiveness of some of the scenes. What features the offering is the fact that it furnishes a number of thrills. It includes much that is spectacular.

"Pigs and Kava"—Chester-Educational

One of the South Sea Isles is the scene of a Chester travel reel which has been screened and titled in fine fashion and is quite entertaining. The tropical adjuncts—grass hute, palms and other effects to be found in more or less torrid regions furnish a pleasing background and the natives, well built and clad in the usual fashion of the dweller of the little-civilized region, are imposing characters. Some of the weird dances of the men and women, their festivities, feast and one of their unusual customs comprise the offering. More South Sea Island stuff of this sort and Martin Johnson will have to look to his laurels.

Pathe Review, No. 47

Scenes taken at a race track showing the ponies going to the post, on their way, coming into the homestretch and leaping overhurdles, feature this Pathe Review which measures up to the highest standard attained in these offerings. A colored scenic opens, Burgos, Spain, furnishing the material. The cathedrals and churches are imposing structures, tinted fairly well, and combined with the shots showing some of the people and one or two taken in outlying districts make that part worth while. Another section shows how the synchronized pencil may be put to use and "The Under Side of a Bouquet" explains how galax leaves are picked. Miss Evans B. Fontaine executes what is styled the South American cabaret dance to close. That title promises something naughty, but the terpsichorean display offered thereafter will get by even the Pennsylvanian censor board. Except for the fact that two men in the background rolling the wicked ivories and adding local color appear while the dancer smokes a cigarette, nothing resembling wickedness is seen in it.

"The Fightin' Terror"—Universal

When they turned out this two reeler, they struck the proverbial nail on the head. It is an offering that should delight the western fan, for it has action and love interest properly balanced with a copious quantity of humor. The introduction of the principal character, Hoot Gibson, sends it off to an excellent start and thereafter it continues at a capital rate of speed. A fight between the star and the representative of a rival town furnishes one of the essential incidents in the story. Of course, stuff of this sort is not new, but the manner in which they have staged it, with the timekeeper tolling off the rounds with a six shooter and the contestants entering the ring wearing their trousers and hats will interest. The essential factor in this is the amount of comedy, which is much in evidence throughout. And it is good comedy.

"A Hero in Everything"—Universal

With the exception of a street scene which will get a laugh or two there is scarcely an incident in this single reel slapstick comedy that will draw laughter. Almost all of it consists of a series of knockabout bits of the old and conventional sort. The leading lady drops a pair of grips on the head of the man with whom she is to elope, the rube stumbles with a pail of milk, falls into a pump, goes to the city where he secures work as a waiter and finally is picked up by a street cleaner. On the busy corner there is also a ripple, but the rest of it will find any audience that has been initiated passive.

"Tell Us, Ouija"—Hall Room Boy Comedies

Ouija Boards have become a national hobby and in turning ou a two-reeler in which the medium whereby spirits may be communed with figures prominently, this organization has indeed been wise. Ordinarily, this would be classed just a little above the general run of short comedies, consisting of a series of bits of business held together loosely by a theme that does not lead up to any particular climax. Many of the incidents are funny, the Ouija Board stuff being certain to register. One scene in which a child is seen first in a derby hat, only the sky-piece being visible at first, provokes a giggle. When, however, they employ a similar scheme showing a pair of large and well-worn shoes protruding from unde ra bed, what actually amounts to the same gag is offered again, for the youngster soon appears wearing them. The subtitle reading "The Spirit of 1920" is sure to make any audience smile and the boarding house material ranks with that used in the productions made hitherto. In view of the popularity of spirit theories just at present, this should get over in good style.

"Illiterate Digest"—Marion H. Kohn Prod.

Will Rogers, author of the remarks which comprise these productions, has quite a following. His name used in conjunction with them will undoubtedly prove of value. The material is clever and the style followed one that will prove popular. Trailers showing Rogers doing some of his stunts add to the appearance of the issues, each of which is about 400 feet long. Otherwise, they do not differ in make-up from other offerings which consist of titles satirizing current events and quips of various sorts. And there is a great supply of that stuff on the market, which is the only objection anyone can have against this. It is funny and a bit different.

"Chang and the Law"—Republic

Rather confusing in places, this issue of the William J. Flynn series in which Herbert Rawlinson is starred maintains interest most of the time. It builds to a climax which furnishes quite a thrill, but has a sort of anti-climax in the footage appended. The portion after the scene in which the tables are turned should be cut down, for it drags in its present form. There are numerous twists in the plot, which in being confined to two reels had to be kept moving rapidly. Carl Harbaugh directed and has turned out a fair detective drama.

"Outlaws of the Deep"—Republic

Smuggling Chinese into the United States is an occupation which lends itself easily to the production of screen dramas, and in this William J. Flynn two-reeler they have shown the manner in which one group thus engaged was captured. There is a goodly amount of suspense in the production, which technically leaves something to be desired. White and red lights figure in the story prominently as warning signals, and the manner in which red tint has been applied in places has left blotches which do not look at all well. Thematically, this is up to the standard maintained in the other issues of the series. J. Gordon Cooper directed and Wilson Mizner is credited with the film version of the story.

"Circus Day"—Reelcraft

Reelcraft has a new boy star in Matty Roubert who plays the leads in some two-reel comedy dramas. The youngster has a pleasing personality and possesses possibilities. In this offering he works zealously and well, the fault being with the story. Were Roubert given farcial stories, the results would be more gratifying. This type of short reel drama appears to have gone out of date, but beyond doubt it will secure booking in moderate size houses. The predominating spirit of youth is its feature, and there is a sufficient amount of pathos and elementary appeal to enable it to hold its own. There is a classroom scene at the start that is of value and one in which several boys stage a circus, imitating the one that comes to town. How Roubert manages to get in to see the show, after a few failures, furnishes the plot. Should you be running a comedy feature, you might find it worth while to put this in with it.

Short Reels

"Leap Year Leaps—Marion H. Kohn

At the very start of this single reeler in which Smiling Bill Jones is starred, the spectator is kept in suspense. The offering keeps going at a satisfactory rate for some time, but towards the finish slows up somewhat. It concerns a prank played on Jones by the editor of a newspaper. The latter inserts a notice in his sheet to the effect that a wealthy bachelor would welcome a leap year proposal. Jones' picture is shown above the item and soon he is besieged by a bevy of women of all sorts. He finally weds the maid who has paid no attention to the story and who had previously spurned his offer.

"An Artist's Muddle"—Universal

Very little that is meritorious is to be found in this two-reel slapstick comedy, in which the bright spot is the scene wherein a group of scantily clad maids are seen. At the very finish there is some improved footage, but the rest of it consists entirely of commonplace knockabout stunts with which most fans are quite familiar. Technically this does not reach a very high standard either, for in one portion where a picture of a woman suddenly assumes life, they have failed to fade the material properly. Noel Smith directed while Lillian Biron, Dick Dickerson and Harry Man are included in the cast.

"Should Waiters Marry"—Universal

George Ovey is featured in this Universal two-reeler, but as a matter of fact most of the genuine humor in it is not put over by him, the work assigned him not being especially funny except in one or two cases. A great deal of it takes place in a restaurant and of course the edibles are tossed about, but they have inserted a few funny scenes. The portion in which the stout comedian who plays the life-saver effects a rescue is the best thing in the production, which for the greater part does not rise above the general run of two-reelers. There are about a half-dozen legitimate laughs in the piece and a comedy needs more than that to get over with critical audiences.

"My Salomy Lions"—Universal

Unlike the scheme followed in most comedies in which trained lions appear, very much of this does not find the felines roaming about a great deal. Towards the finish they do prowl around, but the greater part of this is in the nature of an Oriental burlesque. A farcical harem scene comes at the beginning when three Americans, one a tourist and the others on a honeymoon, arrive. They break into the royal court, are locked in with the lions and engage in various knock-about bits. Staged and photographed nicely, the two reeler holds it own. Fred C. Fishback wrote and directed, while Charles Gay is credited with assisting, having trained the animals.

"A Movie Hero"—Universal

Dramas of all sorts have been burlesqued frequently in comedies, but Universal has turned out a two-reeler, consisting principally of a farce on a western that is likely to amuse almost any audience. They show another picture within the offering in which the heroic sheriff performs many of the feats usually found in the picture dealing with the wild and woolly region. The orchestra of two, interested audience and introduction of the star at the finish have all been filmed so as to get laughs. From almost the very start this keeps the grins coming and the wind-up is especially good. The cast has done excellent work and the direction has been all that could be desired.

"A Broncho Kid"—Universal

Although there is nothing really new in the way of thrills to be found in this two-reel western, it is an offering that should please those who follow this type of film. Hoot Gibson occupies the principal role and when he rescues Yvette Mitchell on a run-away, furnishes some excitement. The scheme is not an original one, but they have screened it splendidly and the offering instead of ending with Hoot kissing the herome, finds him departing and promising to return. Mack V. Wright directed and Arthur Henry Gooden delivered the manuscript.

"Should Dummies Wed"—Fox

Chase stuff, shooting and other riotous events make up the greater part of the Sunshine two-reeler which fails to reveal as many unusual stunts as most of the productions turned out by this organization. It is laid in a pawn shop and draws a laugh at the very start with the trick-bed device. Some of the material centered about the safe is quite funny and the man in the armor also causes hilarity. On the other hand, a great deal of the slapstick material does not mean anything in particular and in places this registers much below the average. Towards the finish, they have handled well the incidents connected with the portable 'phone booths. A lack of incidental diversity however handicaps it.

"A Visit to the Paris Zoo"—Mentor

Animals on the screen amuse most audiences and the initial portion of this Mentor reel should please for just that reason. None of the species seen in it is very much out of the ordinary, but the greater part of it has been filmed in excellent style and the result is satisfactory. The Zoo in Paris, as the title indicates, is the scene of action, and birds as well as quadrupeds appear. There is appended to this section some footage shot in the valley of the Versubie. This part is hand colored and only fair, but what precedes it will undoubtedly go well.

Gaumont will remain in New York for about three weeks, during which time he expects to arrange for a showing of the parade film.

In speaking of his new process he said:

"Before the war we presented in New York the first results of our trichrome process. Since then we have completed same so that it is possible now to assure from the distance and at any time the perfect superposition of the three pictures by means of a very simple apparatus placed at the reach of anybody's hand with some intelligence.

"From the start we immediately and resolutely directed our efforts, in our researches, to the trichrome process, being conviced that it is materially impossible to reproduce with two colors all the shades and all the tints which please our eyes.

"We maintain that the trichrome process alone furnishes the complete solution of the problem. During our stay in New York we are ready to give at our expense any exhibition desired for comparison purposes, and we are even willing to pay $1,000 to

Will Rogers and Son Co-Stars in 'Jes' Call MeJim'

New Film Introduces Young Hopeful—'Old Lady 31' on Screen.

Will Rogers, not satisfied with his own unique position on the screen, is evidently determined to work his family into the celluloid hall of fame, thereby seeking to monopolize the films with the Rogers grin. Thus in his latest Goldwyn vehicle, "Jes' Call Me Jim," at the Strand yesterday, little Jimmie Rogers is introduced to public adoration, and between them father and son make this a picture suitable for any family circle.

It must be stated, however, that little Jimmie Rogers has no opportunity to demonstrate whether he has inherited papa's masterful ways with chewing gum. In other respects, as the small son of a friend of the hero, Jim Fenton, little Jimmie Rogers fulfils the standards of the Rogers brand of genius, except that his repartee is not perhaps so right pert smart as pap's. The photoplay, a transcription of J. G. Holland's book, "Seven Oaks," is droll, romantic, exciting—another catch in Rogers's lariat.

NEW YORK, MONDAY, MAY 24, 1920.

On the Screen.

By ALISON SMITH.

There are two stars in the screen world whose personalities so disarm criticism that it is always baffling to review their films. One is Charles Ray and the other is Will Rogers. The latter made his reputation behind footlights, where he threw his lariat with one hand and juggled western epigrams with the other. The amazing thing is that he had somehow managed to transfer this personality—drawl and all—to the screen and for the life of you, you can't tell whether his play is good or not. It is enough to know that he is there, and that he is always a joy to watch.

He appears at the Strand this week in a firm with the friendly title of "Jes' Call Me Jim." It was adapted from the old novel by J. M. Holland, called "Seven Oaks," whose somewhat stilted humor and sentiment would never make a six-best-seller of the present day. But the scenario writer has enlivened the action and Rogers's own philosophy has found its way into the subtitles until there is little left of the original story except the character of the hero who pleads to be known as jes' only Jim.

He is a hunter and trapper who walks by himself like Kipling's cat. His grudge against humanity has grown out of the fact that his best and only pal has been railroaded into an insane asylum by a couple of smug hypocrites who are trying to steal his invention. This is always a sympathetic theme since every one in this audience knows of some one whose second cousin's best friend had a similarly distressing experience. And when the romantic element is added to the plot in the person of a pretty milliner, the ingredients for popular appeal are complete.

But it is the background combined with Rogers's personality that makes the film really unusual. It does not stop at "seven oaks," but winds the story through a refreshing wilderness of wooded hills and valley vistas. The director, Clarence Badger, has shown a perfect instinct for Will Rogers's natural habitat. Certainly this homely, engaging woodsman represents the best of the Goldwyn output.

s, like wine in pre-prohibi- st seems to get better as . He's better in his latest ture, "Jes' Call Me Jim," is which he appeared on the screen at the Strand Theatre, than he has been in any of his previous film prsentations, much better.

The production is the screen version of the novel "Seven Oaks," and lends itself perfectly to the celluloid. Especially good are the woodland scenes and, while it is hard to imagine Rogers actually out-Hart's the famous William S. in many of the more touching scenes.

And one cannot get on in mentioning the film without giving due credit to tiny little Jimmie Rogers, the son of the star, who generously gives his father the star part and then starts right in to steal the honors away from him.

Last night's outbursts of applause gave ample proof that actors of the Will Rogers and William S. Hart type will outlive by years all the "pretty" movie idols. Among those who helped the star make the homely story of the mountains enjoyable were Irene Rich, Lionel Belmore, Raymond Hatton and Nick Cogley.

The audience was thrilled by the sensational horsemanship displayed by a troop of Italian cavalry and hugely en-

ENING MAIL

IN his latest Goldwyn production entitled "Jes' Call Me Jim," this week's feature screen attraction at the Strand Theatre, Will Rogers again demonstrates that he can act as well as he can throw a lariat and chew the best advertised gums. J. G. Holland's book, "Seven Oaks" has furnished the plot for "Jes' Call Me Jim." The story concerns Jim Fenton (portrayed by Mr. Rogers), a happy-go-lucky trapper, whose best friend has been placed in an insane asylum by conspirators who seek to obtain his invention. How Jim beats them at their own game, saving his friend and at the same time the love of the village milliner, is picturized in a series of thrilling scenes, interwoven with clever comedy. The Strand picture programme also offers a scenic study, a Pathe "Snub Pollard" comedy and the topical review. Carlo Ferretti is the soloist of the music programme.

A term of the contract, it is said, will specify that William Scott, her leading man, who left Fox at the same time, will continue to play opposite her.

As to News Weeklies

Discussing the news weekly, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld says:

"The news weekly is bound to grow into an important part of the theater's program. The fact that it can bring to life the most important and the most striking events in the world's news—supplement the daily pa- per, as it were, with graphic, living illustrations—is evidence enough of what it is bound to become. The helter-skelter way of arranging the news weekly is going to give way to careful editing, just as careful as the newspaper gets now, when it sifts a few hundred items out of the thousands that are submitted."

Prologue "Dope"

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

San Francisco—George Costello, manager of Turner and Dahnken's Tivoli Opera House, has attracted a good deal of attention because of the prologues he puts on at the Tivoli.

Costello here tells how and why he does it:

"So many picture houses just put on a picture, have a little music and nothing else. I thought a little novelty would help out at the Tivoli, some thing that would interest patrons, so I began putting on these prologues. I don't put one on for every picture. I have to have a picture that suggests something to me.

"I study the picture carefully; see it by myself with no one else in the projecting room. Then I think about it for a week. I try to get the spirit of the picture and then figure out a prologue that will express that spirit.

"All pictures don't suggest a prologue. I study it carefully. I draw a stage plan, arrange what I think will make good lighting effects and think of music that should accompany it. Then I call in the stage carpenter, the electrician and the orchestra leader and we discuss the matter.

"We have a good many battles. It is hard to get the men out of a rut. If they've always used a blue light on a snow scene they can't see why we should try green lights. I had that out when I put on the prologue to "The River's End."

"I wanted green; the electrician said blue was the color. We built a box and tried them out, and the lights were green. That meant dipping 600 lamps in green medium, no small job for the electrician and his assistant.

"Often we are up until 4 in the morning working out the plots and effects. We begin when the last show is over about 11:30 and keep at it until we have the problem solved.

"It is expensive sometimes, but expense doesn't count if you accomplish something.

"We tried an experiment one week to find out how much the prologue means. The telephone girl kept count of the people who asked, 'What time does the picture start?' the usual question at a motion picture theater, and how many said, 'What time does the prologue begin?'

"The answer was a 50-50 break. That seemed to be a pretty good test of their value.

"Another thing. I never let the prologues run longer than six minutes. Longer than that tires the audience. And I always put them on before the picture begins. Some managers now, especially in the east, are breaking into the picture with an acted scene, or a song. I think that spoils the continuity of the picture."

a benevolent society if a competitor can show us a picture above or equal to ours in quality.

"Films used for view taking and projecting purposes are the very films regularly supplied by the Eastman Kodak and on which we have made all trials.

"We are using the same width and the same perforation. The formulas and processes of panchromatising pertain to the laboratory. There is no sorcery in it once you know the nature of the products and the proportion of the mixtures of panchromatising products.

"The various developing operations, toning, printing, are the same as those for ordinary films with the exception, however, of the development of the negative in an almost absolute darkness.

"Do not forget that the colors appear on the screen only thanks to and on account of the use of filters placed before the objectives of the camera and also before those of the projecting machine. The apparatus differs in a very small proportion from that used daily by all the operators, and the use of the latter is neither difficult nor complicated. In fact, some apparatus has already been constructed.

"The only criticism that could be made regarding our process, if this can be called a criticism, is the fact that by projecting and superimposing simultaneously three pictures a special projection machine is an absolute necessity, also a metalized screen, making the projection more luminous, avoiding thus the diffusion at the rear sides of the room of part of the projected light.

"We would advise the American producers who will undoubtedly produce color pictures, to give up from the start the thought of producing big features, dramas or comedies, the expenses for the negative being only assured by the exploitation of a certain number of projecting machines."

Mary O'Connor, head of the coast scenario department of Famous Players, has arrived in New York from California for a vacation.

shows that sub-franchise awards have been made by the executive committee to 43 theaters now under construction, and planned for openings in September, October and November.

In more than 100 localities, it is announced, the franchise already granted will not become operative until early in the fall because of theaters closed for repairs.

A peculiar and unexpected phase of the sub-franchise plan in relation to the so-called "one-man-town" situations, wherein one exhibitor owns the only theater, is that First National branch managers, in many such instances, have received applications from independent exhibitors in nearby cities and towns for franchise grants in the "one-man-towns" should the exhibitors controlling the situation fail, for any reason, to seek a membership. In every such case investigation at the behest of the executive committee has shown that the applicants are independent exhibitors with an ambition to extend their present theater holdings by acquiring new properties, through construction, in places which are classified as "only one theater localities."

the Chicago meeting were instructed to make a report to the original Cleveland convention. I do not doubt the sincerity of Rembusch but I think he is making a mistake in calling a second convention unless he has positive information that the Chicago committee would not be recognized on the floor.

"Independent exhibitors need men of the executive ability of both Rembusch and Cohen. For the good of the cause they should get together. There are too many problems which both factions agree on to split now.

"Let's bury the hatchet and build up one big organization along the lines of honesty of purpose. Personally I have no political ambitions, but will put forth every effort to bring all factions together and help formulate ways and means to protect the independent exhibitors."

Frank Rembusch has sent a long letter to Harry W. Kress of the Piqua Amusement Co., Piqua, Ohio, in which the following interesting matter appears:

"Mr. Van Praag has made an unwarranted attack on me in the trade journals, and that does not worry me, except he has been in partnership with Cohen for many months and his opinion is not unbiased.

"Let me again assure the committee of my desire to bring about harmony. I am still waiting to hear from Cleveland, as I wired Mr. Lustig over a week ago as to our meeting place. I am more than ever convinced that I was right in providing a place at the Cleveland Hotel. I am ready to go anywhere if they promise to allow me to report and abide by majority rule.

"How is this for a compromise:

"Let Mr. Cohen's crowd agree that they are to give up their national organization, and we give up our independent organization, and the league give up theirs, and then we will put $200,000 in the treasury out of our pockets, and hire the best brains can get to keep us out of trouble, have a representative in each of film centers for that purpose, to that producers do not build theat or do any other of the damn f things that have been put over on for all these years, because we wo organize right. What is all this f about? Think it over."

Fails to Exercise Option

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Dallas—First National has failed to exercise its option on the Jefferson Theater, secured some weeks ago when the break threatened with Hulsey-Lynch.

First National threatened to establish its own theater here because it claimed Paramount-Artcraft pictures were given preference to those produced by the First National.

The option on the Jefferson Theater was for $176,000, and expired last Thursday.

Doug and Mary Here

May Attend Cleveland Convention on Way Back to Coast

Douglas Fairbanks and his wife, Mary Pickford, arrived in New York yesterday from California. They may attend the Cleveland convention on their way back to the coast.

En route east the couple stopped off at the Hopi Indian reservation in Arizona where Doug was presented with an elk's charm of beaten silver by what he termed "the best darned Indian he ever saw."

The trip east is primarily to attend the annual meeting of the United Artists' Corp., which will be held today. At the meeting the election of officers will be held.

Doug said he hoped he wasn't speaking for publication, but he thought "Bull' Montana would make an excellent type of executive.

Both Doug and Mary are looking for material. Mary, who was somewhat tired from the trip, seemed anxious to ascertain what the newspaper folk thought of her making "Little Lord Fauntleroy," in which she intends playing both Fauntleroy and his mother.

Doug looked great and said he never was happier in all his life. The trip abroad has been postponed for the present, but Doug said he is anxious to make a picture in Paris jumping off the Eiffel Tower.

The Fairbanks party is at the Ritz, where an elaborate suite has been engaged.

May Drop Loew's Name

It is understood that Metro may drop Marcus Loew's name from its productions except when those pictures play the Loew theaters.

Nothing could be learned concerning this from the Metro offices other than that the policy on that matter had not been decided.

The Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce held a regular meeting yesterday at which it was announced that about 100 exhibitor members would go to Cleveland for the convention. It is understood that at the meeting it was stated that none of the members are booking Metro pictures that mention Loew's name in the contract or on the film itself.

Asher Here

E. M. Asher, Mack Sennett's personal rep. arrived in New York from Los Angeles yesterday. He will remain here for several months.

At Broadway Theaters

This Is How First Run Houses Are Presenting Their Programs This Week

The following illustrates how the leading Broadway theatres presented their programs this week. This feature will appear regularly in the Wednesday issue of WID'S DAILY.

Broadway

All the stories of T. R. Zann and his pet lion, which found their way into prominent position of the New York dailies last week, bore fruit in the way of large audiences at the Broadway on Sunday, the first day of the showing of "The Return of Tarzan." It was advertised in the Sunday papers that Mr. Zann and his gentle pet would appear in person—and they did. In their honor the stage was given over to a beautiful jungle set by John Wenger, the colors of which were in no way detrimentally affected by the cage bars circling the edge of the stage near the footlights. Mr. Zann petted the jungle creature, fed him more expensive steak and rode on his back. The audiences appreciated their capers immensely. The picture was shown immediately after this prologue and the many thrills, so well emphasized in the advertising, really got over as the genuine articles. "Mignon" was the overture and besides a topical review and "Topics of the Day," there was another feature, the appearance of Bert Errol and eight girls, proficient on the saxophone and banjo. But T. R. Zann in the flesh and Tarzan in the celluloid were the big attractions. The Broadway has a splendid lobby display also, jungle grass effects draping the color portraits from the production. These pictures are attractive and in many cases sensational and drew a small gallery Sunday afternoon. Another advertising feature that is pulling business is the appearance in 500 store windows throughout the city of displays of the many "Tarzan" books by Edgar Rice Burroughs, together with cutouts and stills from the production. All this publicity and exploitation has counted heavily with the result that the Broadway, on Sunday afternoon certainly, preesnted a more lively appearance than most of the houses along the street.

Rivoli

"Why Change Your Wife" is playing at this house and from the appearance of the lobby, crowded as usual in the evenings, there is nothing to indicate that it already played five weeks down the line at the Criterion. The Chaplin revival, "Behind the Screen," the feature's companion piece during the last week at the Criterion, is also on the bill and receives a prominent share of the advertising space. The surrounding numbers are changed, including the overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," the pictorial, a duet, "Sunrise and You," rendered by Betty Anderson and Gladys Rice, and the organ solo, "So'emn March."

Rialto

The orchestra floor of the Rialto, usually well filled and very often overcrowded Sunday afternoons, was in comparison empty last Sunday at this time. Warm weather, a holiday week end and lack of feature advertising material, tended to keep the audience strangely small, and even after the conclusion of the first de luxe show, the house was easily only half filled. The best received number on the bill was the overture, the first and second movements of "Scheherazade," which brought forth spirited applause. The Rialto Magazine this week contains some last pictures of Carranza which were looked upon in interested silence. The duet from "Martha," rendered by Martin Brefel, tenor, and Edoardo Albano, baritone, was appreciatively received, although it fails to sweep an audience into applause as do many of the musical numbers presented at Riesenfeld's houses. The feature, "Thou Art the Man," starring Robert Warwick, apparently weak in box office power, failed to hold the attention of the matinee audience. Its exceedingly wandering character was no doubt responsible for this. The Sunshine comedy, "The House of Terrible Scandal," in which Henry Lehrman and Billie Ritchie appear, brought the best response of the pictorial numbers, although it played on Broadway some time ago under another title. The concluding organ solo is comprised of selections from "The Gondoliers."

Capitol

It may have been mere coincidence or a supreme effort on the part of the directors of the retiring policy at the Capitol, but certainly the last bill of opera and pictures was practically the best shown at this house in regard to the musical end of the program. Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pirates and Penzance" was the opera, well sung and admirably staged. The holiday audience which crowded the big house to the very roof registered its distinct approval of all the airs, the humorous ones in particular. The feature, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," following the operatic number, proved somewhat too long to hold the interest, although its latter sequences registered. A Beethoven selection, "Leonore No. 3," was given as the

In the Courts

Thomas R. Gardiner, who bought the New York State rights to "The Blindness of Youth," sued Murray W. Garsson in the Supreme Court for $7,000 damages. The plaintiff alleges that the name of a film is a material part of the value and that one of the reasons why "The Blindnes of Youth" was valuable was because Lou Tellegen played in "Blind Youth." He said that Garsson sold him the state right to "The Blindness of Youth" on March 4 last knowing that suit had been brought against him to restrain him from using the title. An injunction was granted in the case on April 30.

Garsson stated yesterday that at the time he sold the picture to Gardiner the latter knew that the injunction sought by National Picture Theaters had been originally denied. Garsson said that the injunction now in force against his production was only a temporary one and that the case would come to trial shortly.

In the suit of Orrin Johnson against the Goldwyn Picture Corp. for breach of contract an answer has been filed admitting that negotiations were had between the plaintiff and the defendant through Mr. Goldwyn and Mr. Mooser, but denying that a contract was made.

The Frohman Amusement Corp. has sued the Beehive Film Exchange and the Reelcraft Picture Corp. through Goldsmith & Rosenthal for $5,000. The cause of the suit is not shown.

The Vitagraph Company has been sued by Tony Leta, a child, for $10,000 and by his father for $5,000, because he was run over by a Vitagraph automobile at Chrystie and Stanton streets on May 26, 1919.

Supreme Court Justice Newburger has denied an application by the Blinderman & Cohen Co. to set aside a verdict for $3,008 obtained by Harry Samwick for commissions for the sale of a film house in Clinton street on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The case was based on the testimony of David N. Picker and Louis Starr and the defendant says the jury got the impression that $250 was paid to Starr for obtaining a $25,000 mortgage on the property and not for the sale. The defendant has found a general release signed by Starr upon the payment of $250 which the defendant says is proof that Starr and not Samwick brought about the sale.

An attachment for $1,802 against the property of Rene Moreau, a French film dealer, on the ground that he is about to leave for Paris to avoid paying his obligations to creditors here, has been granted in the Supreme Court on the application of Albert C. de Belleuse.

A default judgment for $2,757 has been entered in the Supreme Court against Walter F. Niebuhr by the firm of Powell, Wynne, Lowrie & Ruch for services rendered and for loans made.

More Improvements

Omaha—A. H. Blank plans to spend $250,000 this summer remodelling the Strand. A larger orchestra entirely hidden from view is an idea of Manager Harry Watts, which will be carried out in the remodeling. A hugs lobby, with a central fountain lighted by hidden lights; a rest room for women, a smoking room for men and enlarged seating capacity will be other new plans. The seating capacity will be increased about 50 per cent.

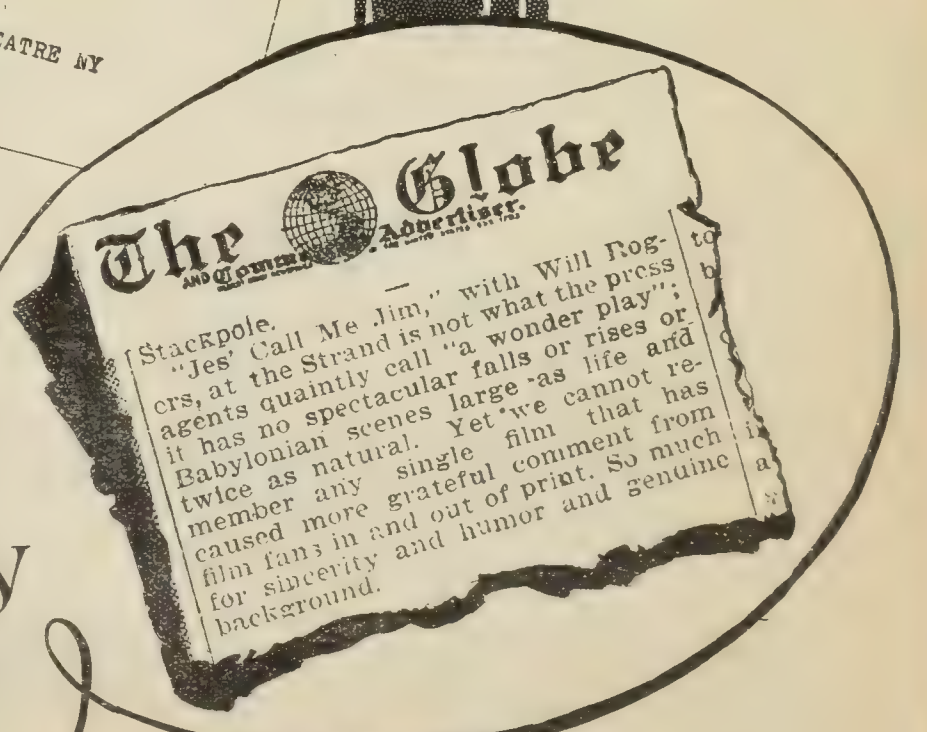
318AM

In addition to a laudatory review on Monday, "The Globe" on Wednesday makes this extra special comment



The Globe and Commercial Advertiser.

Stackpole.

"Jes' Call Me Jim," with Will Rogers, at the Strand is not what the press agents quaintly call "a wonder play"; it has no spectacular falls or rises or Babylonian scenes large as life and twice as natural. Yet we cannot remember any single film that has caused more grateful comment from film fans in and out of print. So much for sincerity and humor and genuine background.

overture and was very well received. The Sunshine comedy, "Girls and Gunpowder," also registered. The Capitol News rounded out the bill.

Strand

The S. R. O. call was given early Sunday evening outside the Strand and after the second show the right half of the lobby was jammed with hundreds waiting to get in. The big crowds hugely enjoyed William Faversham in "The Man Who Lost Himself." Faversham's pantomimic ability and splendid sense of comedy registered bit after bit of business to the audible delight of the audience. The surrounding program was also well received. The overture was composed of selections from "Aida." The review concluded with Burton Holmes' "A Gold Star Pilgrimage," which shows the thousands of American crosses in France. This number was observed in solemn silence. Malcolm McEachern, popular basso, sang "Mother of Mine and enchored with "A Low Back Car." Mmle. Fanny Rezia, soprano, rendered two selections at the feature's conclusion, while "Out of the Inkwell," a Max Fleisher-Bray cartoon, and "Narcissus" on the organ concluded.

Criterion

The screen version of Fannie Hurst's well known novel, "Humoresque," is having its initial theater presentation at the Criterion this week. The picture was highly praised when shown to an invited audience at the Ritz Carlton a few weeks ago.

Hugo Riesenfeld has prepared an especially appropriate program accompanying the feature. The overture is Dvorak's "Humoresque" and Emanuel List sings "Eli, Eli," assisted by a chorus. Mme. Lubovska is seen in a dance, "Gavotte Grotesque."

A scenic, "In the Holy Land of Today," and a Mack Sennett comedy, "By Golly," complete the film part of the bill.

Signs 8 Authors

Metro Lands Prominent Writers—Has First Call On Their Output

It was officially learned yesterday from Col Jasper Ewing Brady, head of the scenario department at Metro, that his company had signed eight prominent authors and that by the terms of the contracts with them Metro has first call on all their writings—past, present and future, for some to come.

The authors signed are as follows: Irvin S. Cobb, Donn Byrne, George Kibbe Turner, Hurlbert Footner, Henry C. Rowland, Arthur Stringer, F. Scott Fitzgerald and, as noted, Arthur Somers Roche.

Metro will either use stories supplied by the above for its stars, providing the material fits them, or build the cast around the story requirements.

Brady stated yesterday that Metro was in the market for original stories and had just purchased three. One of these is "The Passion Fruit," by Carey Wilson, and another, "The Hunch," by Percival Wilde.

"Message from Mars" for Lytell

"A Message from Mars" is one of the pictures which Bert Lytell will make in New York. Nothing has been said about the remaining three of the four which Lytell is scheduled to make here.

Court to Decide "Peg" Profits

Ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien of the Supreme Court was selected yesterday to act as referee in determining the profits accrued from "Peg o' My Heart" for which Mrs. Annie T. Morosco is suing her husband, Oliver Morosco.

"The God of His Fathers" is the next Jack London story to be picturized by C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., for release by Metro.

"In these pages, two months ago," says George Jean Nathan in "Smart Set," "I set down my impressions of the moving pictures, the persons who brew them, and the persons who promote them. The impressions were not, so to speak, overly rich in flattery. In fact, they were, so to speak, somewhat soupy. No sooner did the article make its appearance than the moving picture entrepreneurs had at me. And what was the burden of these letters, these articles, these speeches, these calls, these smell bombs? * * *

"Instead of seeking to point out the defects in my reasoning—anyone with a modest gift for satire might have had some fun at my expense, the good folk, following the practice of the world in which they move, promptly accused me of being a sorehead because I had in all probability tried to write moving picture scenarios and had had them rejected Such is the thinking of our amusement noodles."

Back at Old Job—Will Introduce a Number of Foreign Novelties

Joseph L., familiarly known as "Joe" Plunkett, will again become managing director of the New York Strand, assuming his old duties once again about June 25. Plunkett succeeds Jack Eaton.

When he left the Strand last year Plunkett joined B. S. Moss and had under his charge the immediate supervision over the string of Moss-Famous Players theaters. When Moss split with Famous Plunkett went to England for Selznick, where he opened branch offices for the latter. His salary at the Strand is said to be one of the highest paid to any showman in the country, among whom his reputation is of the best.

"The Return of Tarzan" Film of Thrills

New Feature at the Broadway More Startling Than "Tarzan of the Apes"

Two bare-handed fights against fierce man-eating lions, a combat with a hungry tigress, two fights against leopards and hand-to-hand struggles against numerous human enemies constitute a few of the sensational and exciting episodes in "The Return of Tarzan," the adventure film now running at the Broadway Theatre.

"The Return of Tarzan," from the second book by Edgar Rice Burroughs, is even more startling than the original "Tarzan of the Apes" and seems destined to have an even greater vogue as a film than the sensational first picture.

In this production, Tarzan is seen beset by human enemies in his short stay amid civilization's surroundings and on his return trip to the jungles of Africa, which he prefers to society, he encounters many human intriguers more deadly than the beasts of the dark continent.

Once during the picture's projection he is attacked by a score of ruffians whom he puts to flight. Later he is tied to a tree and left, the victim of any roaming beast, but severs his cords and with his bare hands kills a man-eating lion.

There have been few adventure pictures so well formed and so pleasingly shown as "The Return of Tarzan" and that it is in for a long run at the Broadway Theatre is indicated by the daily crowds.

Gene Pollar, Estelle Taylor, Karla Schramm, Ormond Cortez and Lew Sterne play the leading roles for this Goldwyn special summer novelty drama.

May Be One Confab

Decision Understood to Rest Entirely With Sydney Cohen—Committee Meets

Although no official statement was issued by the Committee of 17 of the Independent M. P. Exhibitors of America last night, it is understood that whatever differences may have existed between committee members have been adjusted and that the question of whether Cleveland will next year see one convention or two rests with Sydney S. Cohen.

It was learned that Mr. Cohen was invited to attend the committee's meeting in the Astor to gauge his attitude on the matter, but until six o'clock last night he had not made his appearance. One member of the committee said: "The question of whether we have one convention or two rests entirely with Mr. Cohen."

J. Van Praag of Kansas City and Frank Rembusch were seen arm in arm in the Astor lobby during the day and it was later learned that their votes on Cleveland were now in accord. Yesterday morning, a vote of confidence was given Rembusch by the committee.

Of the 17 members of the committee the only ones absent were Sig Samuels. Georgia; L. E. Lund, California, and Maurice Choynski, Illinois.

The committee will today see the producers on the theater question and leave town Sunday for Cleveland. Meyer Sulzberger has been retained as attorney.

Monster Combine Is Being Effected

If Completely Developed Would Establish Unusual Conditions in Entire Industry from Production to Distribution—Capitalization in Aggregate Will Run to Millions—Important Companies Involved

Plans are being perfected which, in their magnitude, promise to bring about in all probability the most stupendous booking and sales organization in the history of the industry.

The plan has developed far beyond the initial stage. Meetings have been held at which practically all of the necessary details have been completed. Offices have been secured in New York City and the general manager has practically been decided upon. Distributors have been approached, producers as well. And certain exchange men have arranged to use their machinery in almost every important distributing center in this country.

When in operation this concern plans to distribute in a manner definitely similar to that of the Stanley Company of Philadelphia, although the booking percentage is expected to be less

F. P.-L. Promise Two to Every Four Films Released—The Line-up for 1920-1921

In the making of specials Cecil B. De Mille, William De Mille, George Fitzmaurice and George H. Melford are expected to take a leading part.

Cecil B. De Mille will probably make four, as will George Fitzmaurice. William De Mille is scheduled for five and George Melford for six.

William S. Hart will make four.

Roscoe Arbuckle will make six.

John Barrymore will be starred in two pictures.

Upon her return from Japan, Elsie Ferguson will begin work in Hollywood on the first of four pictures. One will be "Sacred and Profane Love."

Another feature will be George Loane Tucker's picture, "Ladies Must Live," presented by Mayflower.

that he was not in line for any office in the organization. "I just want to see things run smoothly and I'll be content to remain in the rank and file," said "Pat."

Mr. Rembusch said yesterday:

"One thing that I am going to demand as soon as I go on the convention floor in Cleveland is to find out whether the exhibitors present will stick by the will of the majority and not bolt as has been the custom in national conventions for years past.'

Speaking of his idea for one big man to head a national exhibitor organization, Rembusch said:

"Can't you see what influence it would have if a man like ex-President W. H. Taft headed the one exhibitor organization of the country. People outside of the industry would say 'the picture people are at last getting somewhere and settling down.'

"I advocate one exhibitor organization with a direct membership method, irregardless of the state or city organizations. The national body will take care of matters of national interest and will be above the interests of any individual group in any state or city that may be blinded by its own needs. That's what I am going to fight for at Cleveland."

Mr. Cohen could not be reached at his office last night for a statement.

Laemmle Pledges Support Again

Carl Laemmle of Universal again pledged his support to the independent exhibitors yesterday.

He said in a statement that he would dispose of the several theaters Universal had been compelled to buy if necessary to show his good will in the matter, and said the entire resources of his company were available for the independents.

He spoke of the exhibitors who by virtue of a chain controlled a town and compared them with producers who owned theaters.

Can't Hold Films

Because of Difficulties of United, Receiver Says

Hallmark Pictures Corp. has made public a letter received from Harry Zalkin, receiver for United Picture Theaters and United Picture Prod. Corp. regarding the alleged holding of United productions by exhibitors who are charged wit htrying to make good their losses through connection with United at the expense of another. Hallmark enters into the matter because it handles the physical distribution of the United product.

Zalkin says in his letter that such seizure by exhibitors is illegal and that the U. S. District Court will not permit such action. He says he intends holding responsible any exhibitor for any damages caused.

Leon J. Bamberger and Joe Levy have formed a new partnership under the name of Bamberger & Levy, and have opened offices in the Putnam Bldg., where they will conduct a general sales agency, handling scenarios and plays, negatives for world rights, state rights, exploitation, advertising, etc. Bamberger has held positions with Fox, Selznick, Walter Irwin and J. Bryan Almost a Film Star

J. Stuart Blackton in a statement to the press states that he was made a proposition in November, 1918, to make a prohibition film with William Jennings Bryan as the leading figure.

After considerable dickering in which Blackton states considerable time was lost, he started to make a picture on the promise that Bryan would appear in it.

Later, according to Blackton, Bryan could not raise the money among his friends and so Blackton finished the picture and released it as "The Moonshine Trail" in straight dramatic form. Pathe was the distributor.

Parker Finishes Talmadge Film

Albert Parker has completed the Norma Talmadge feature, "The Branded Woman," the scenario for which he and Anita Loos did. Parker will begin work on his second Talmadge picture within a short time, giving up his contemplated vacation.

Lesser Sides With Exhibitors

Sol Lesser has issued a statement defining his position on the demand of the exhibitors that producers shall not invade the exhibiting field and vice versa. In his statement Lesser asserts that he was a producer and had the Annette Kellerman and George Beban productions under way long before he became a First National franchise owner. It was imperative that he go through with the productions once started, but he intends to make no more productions now these two are finished.

There are some in the industry who believe that this combination will be so stupendous in its operation that it will fail and prove ineffective by virtue of its huge bulk.

It promises to be discussed at the Cleveland exhibitors' convention.

Prologue Circuit

Being Projected for Wide Use in First National Theaters

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Nation-wide booking of prologues for picture theaters is the outgrowth of a plan being talked of here. So great has been the interest of exhibitors all over the country, however, that it is reported First National has taken up the undertaking and will probably carry it through the entire country.

When Jack Callicott of the Kinema first mapped out the working chart for the circuit the original plan called for a routing of prologues produced by him for the Kinema stage at First National houses in the territory controlled by Gore Bros. and Sol Lesser, with a pro rata taxation on each exhibitor.

It was proposed that Callicott stage the initial productions at an outlay of $2,000 for each prologue. With a chain of 30 or more theaters sharing in the expense, the cost to each would

Reopens Theater With His Own Individual Type of Program

S. L. ("Roxy") Rothapfel returned to Broadway last night when the Capitol was reopened after a three-day shutdown with "Roxy's" own particular type of program at the big theater.

"Roxy" made some radical changes at the Capitol. He eliminated the reserved seat section, cut down on the theater's opera policy and reduced prices to $1 top at night ranging down to 40 cents and 30 and 40 cents during the day.

Differences Settled

Rembusch and Cohen Come to Agreement—Black Here

Frank Rembusch, chairman of the Independent M. P. Exhibitors of America, and Sydney Cohen, president of the M. P. Theater Owners of America, who have been at odds regarding the Cleveland conventions, have come to an agreement. All differences that may have existed between the two organizations have been settled.

Willard C. Patterson said last night: "The little family quarrel has been patched up. We have been assured of every consideration by Mr. Cohen."

A committee of 27 representing the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America will meet the Committee of 17 of the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America in Cleveland on Monday, previous to the opening of the general conventions scheduled for that city for the purpose of formulating plans leaning toward the holding of one big exhibitor convention in Cleveland.

Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., arrived in town yesterday morning and in the afternoon held a meeting to discuss the Cleveland situation.

Mr. Black could not be reached last night for a statement, but it is understood that matters progressed far enough to say that in all probability the M. P. E. A. will hold its convention with the M. P. T. O. A. and the I. M. P. E. A.

This means that the Sydney Cohen organization, which bolted the M. P. E. A. in St. Louis last summer, and the old league will convene jointly

Expediting C. O. D. Shipments

Washington—W. J. Barrows, acting third assistant postmaster general, has sent a letter to the postmasters of all cities where exchanges are located, with the view of having insured C. O. D. shipments of films properly prepared, so as to prevent delay. The circular follows:

"From complaints received from postmasters it would appear that the occasional delays sustained by insured and C. O. D. shipments of motion picture films are in a large measure due to the fact that containers in which the films are shipped are not properly prepared and addressed. It appears that these are frequently used without the old labels having been taken off or the new labels placed on the container so as to thoroughly cover up the old label.

"It is requested that you take up with the motion picture film manufacturers, distributors and exchanges in your city, the matter of properly preparing their shipments so as to prevent delays thereto. Extreme care should be exercised to see that the names and addresses of senders and addressees are legibly and clearly shown, and that any previous addresses or indicia on the container are removed or thoroughly crossed out so that postal employees handling the parcel will not be confused as to the correct address.

"Labels or wrappers should be so addressed also that the name of the sender will not be confused with the name of the addressee, which frequently happens, with the result that parcels are returned to the senders without having been dispatched to destination.

"Labels and postage stamps and C. O. D. tags should be securely affixed to the container so that they will not become detached in transit.

"In any instance, where motion picture films sent by insured and C. O. D. mail are not properly addressed or prepared, please bring the matter to the attention of this office."

Moore Busy on Plans

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—The formation in Delaware of Moore's Parkway Theater Co. and the Capitol Theater Co. last week was designed to provide for the two new theaters Tom Moore of the Rialto has planned for this city.

The Capitol is to be located on New York Ave. near 14th St., one of the "cream spots" of the downtown district. Every car in the city comes to this corner, or transfers there.

The directors associated with Mr. Moore on the board of this company will probably be the most representative board of directors in any theater in the business. This board will include high officials in public life and members of Congress, and will be announced shortly. The Capitol will be financed by Moore personally with the exception of 12 blocks of stock of $10,000 each.

The Capitol is expected to be unique as a theater proposition, in that it will be named after the United States Capitol and located in Washington, the capital of the United States. Also the lobby and foyer of this theater will be a replica of the front of the United States Capitol. It will be an expensive front as it will reach to the dome in construction approximately 125 ft. high. Searchlight floods playing on the dome of this front will make it stand out so as to be seen from most any part of the city. The columns in this building will be of limestone and expensive materials.

This is the theater in which Moore plans to use approximately one change a month, or 13 pictures a year, each and every one of which is to be staged on a pretentious scale and to have its own set of scenery, lighting effects and atmosphere.

The Capitol will have a matinee and evening performance daily set aside for reserved seats where tickets may be purchased as far as a month in advance. The forenoon and supper show will be given on the continuous policy. Prices for these attractions will be 75c and $1. The mezzanine loge balcony will have a promenade rich in atmosphere and comfort with private hat racks in each box. The Capitol covers an area of nearly 200 ft. deep by 90 ft. wide.

The Parkway is Moore's own project, bag and baggage. He is expending the total amount of money needed for the erection of this theater himself. It covers an area of 90 ft. wide by 160 ft. deep. This is in the heart of the Mt. Pleasant district on the corner of Park Road and 14th St., which is the apex of the thickly populated section of Washington's representative people. The Parkway will be a replica of Moore's Rialto, 2,000 seats on one floor.

The First National shield will be both prominent on the front of the theater as well as a special model in all newspaper advertisements. In other words, when the advertising campaigns are laid out for the fall the entire chain of these model and progressive houses will have their announcements within a large circular First National chain drawn especially for the purpose, the houses enclosed as a whole within this circle. The trademark of First National will be put forward here in a manner so as to let the public know the full meaning of First National trademark.

Bellaire, O.—In Martin's Ferry the Fenray and Pastime theaters decided to open on Sundays, but public sentiment and the city officials proved too much for the exhibitors.

Here in Bellaire, adjoining Martin's Ferry, exhibitors never asked or wanted Sunday shows, but the City Council last Friday night reported favorably on a license ordinance giving local theaters the right to remain open on Sunday from 1:30 to 11:30, with a $1.50 tax per seat per year. If the four theaters in town are willing the ordinance will pass.

The Sprague Amusement Co. controlling three theaters here does as much business in six days as in seven. And there you are.

be comparatively small, even after the overhead expense of booking office and travel had been added.

Since a visit to San Francisco Callicott is said to have received the indorsement of First National members throughout the country, and additional impetus has been given the scheme by a telegram understood to have been received from J. D. Williams of First National.

Williams has forwarded a proposal from the home office which is now being submitted to all First National exhibitors, and through which the circuit will be able to engage the artists for a period of 200 weeks.

It is planned to contract for the services of the headliners of the operatic and vaudeville stage, as well as for a number of legitimate stars.

The plans call for four divisions, a western, northern, eastern and southern. Each division is to be under the direction of a routing and booking office with subdivisions for each state or territory.

The western division will comprise California, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, Oregon, Washington and Idaho. Each state will again have its own subbooking and routing office, under direction of the home booking office.

All talent will be fully rehearsed in at least six prologue productions, for the picture which may be shown in one city may not be shown in another for several weeks, and it will be necessary that they change their repertoire in another prologue production upon their arrival.

Sol Lesser stated that communications have been forwarded by the home office to Carolina White and Orville Harold.

"We will sign up every well-known star and performer and will spare no expense to secure the greatest acts for our circuit," said Lesser. "With 6,000 houses ready to give a week or sometimes two weeks First National can well afford to contract talent for a period of almost two years. I believe that Jack Callicott's plan is without doubt the dawn of a new era in cinema entertainment."

Michael Gore states that Jack Callicott will have charge of activities in the western territory.

No statement could be secured from First National yesterday regarding the above.

"Roxy" at Capitol

Noticeable in the new form of entertainment was the summer garb of the theater. The Capitol concert orchestra occupied a prominent position on the stage. Back of the orchestra ranged the Capitol ensemble. The orchestra pit was a bower of flowers and vines.

In addition to the transfer of the orchestra to the stage, a second stage has been erected at an elevation of five feet, just back of the orchestra. The second stage is sufficiently large to permit of the customary screen and the novelties planned by Rothapfel. A beautiful allegorical curtain has been supplied by Art Director John Wenger. During the vocal numbers the Capitol ensemble was seated immediately in front of the second or miniature stage, and between the two divisions of the orchestra.

At the sides of the smaller stage and extending behind the orchestra to the main proscenium were allegorical landscapes, also the work of Wenger. The pit, formerly occupied by the orchestra, was transformed into a bower of greenery and artificial flowers.

Not the least of the interior embellishments was a marked change in the lighting effects. The sombreness heretofore characteristic of the theater was dispelled through a radical change from dead and lusterless illumination to soft lights sufficient to emphasize the beauties of the theater interior.

Rothapfel decided on a two-hour progra minterspersed with orchestral selections, vocal and ensemble numbers, picture features and novelties.

Victor Herbert's "American Fanasie," a potpourri of patriotic and oldtime songs, opened the musical program, these numbers being followed by interpretive dance numbers by the Albertieri Dancers.

One of the most beautiful of the musical numbers was the group of Indian love lyrics sung by Capitol soloists. Another pleasing feature consisted of excerpts from "Mlle. Modiste," by the orchestra, assisted by Irene Williams and the ensemble.

The film features include "Scratch My Back" with T. Roy Barnes and Helene Chadwick, and a Hy Mayer Travelaugh, "At the Zoo."

The bill with which "Roxy" inaugurated last night his regime will be continued without change for the new week.

The fronts of both theaters will be constructed of glazed cotta. A feature is the plans calling for an immense tea and soda grille. The soda grille will be located in the basement. The tea room will be on the main floor near the entrances and will accommodate 1,500 patrons.

The London theaters will feature British made pictures.

On April 5 WID'S DAILY, in a special cable from London, stated that the Allens has secured a site in London for a theater.

Before J. J. Allen went to London last winter, this publication also indicated that the European trip was for the purpose of arranging for the building of theaters in England and the Continent.

Plans Ready for New Portola

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

San Francisco—Within the near future the present Portola theater in Market street, near Fourth, is to be razed to make way for the construction of a $1,000,000 picture palace, typically Californian in architecture and with a seating capacity of about 2,500.

These plans are made known by Herbert Rothchild and Herman Wobber of the California-Imperial-Portola chain.

Contracts have already been let by these interests for the opening work on the big Granada theater, soon to be erected at Market and Jones Sts. Wobber has hinted that still another huge theater will be erected in the city and says that the site has already been chosen and will be made known in the near future.

Famous Players are understood to own a controlling interest in the California string of theaters.

Lack of Proper Atmosphere Prevents This From Achieving Real Strength

"THE COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE"
Vitagraph Special

DIRECTOR .....David Smith

SCENARIO BY.....Robert North Bradbury
CAMERAMAN .....Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Lack of proper production values keep this down.
STORY.....Doesn't contain atmosphere of "bigness" for which author is famous.
DIRECTION .....Only fair
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fair
LIGHTINGS.....Quite a few scenes poorly lighted
CAMERA WORK .....Fair
LEADING PLAYERS.....Pauline Starke and Niles Welch satisfactory.
SUPPORT ..... Capable
EXTERIORS.....Satisfactory snow stuff
INTERIORS ..... Negligible
DETAIL .....Hardly any of it
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Romance of the far north.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,447 feet

They haven't been altogether successful in communicating the atmosphere of "bigness" to "The Courage of Marge O'Doone." This is an atmosphere that James Oliver Curwood always strives for in his stories of the northern snows and was doubtless part of this one in its printed form. The producers, however, haven't quite succeeded in catching this element. Perhaps the chief fault is that they left the job for the subtitles to undertake. But Curwood's descriptive color should have been injected into the action itself to make it convincing.

Because of this inability to catch the spirit of bigness many of the story's situations lack the required dramatic force. For instance, in the beginning they introduce Michael and Margaret O'Doone, who live up in the big snows. Michael is a friend of all and when an Indian comes to him because his wife is sick, he makes a long trip to see if he can mend matters. Because he stays away overnight Margaret goes momentarily insane and believes that a licentious trapper is her husbnd. They lead you to believe that the trapper takes advantage of Margaret.

This whole sequence doesnt register as true. Anyway it causes the separation of the O'Doones and throws their baby, Marge, into the hands of rough characters. Years pass and Michael has become doctor of souls and bodies of the whole north. He meets David Raine, a youth from the east, disillusioned in love. David has found a picture of Marge left in the railway carriage seat by Margaret and decides to go north to find her because it says on the photograph that "she is alone."

The rest of the picture is taken up with David's finding of Marge and his fights to keep her from falling into the hands of the "brute." After a bear fight has been rung in and a man and dog fight is told of in the subtitles the happy ending is brought in with David and Marge together and Michael and Margaret reunited. It seems after all that the trapper didn't take advantage of Margaret.

The exteriors of this are true enough snow scenes, but somehow they don't suggest the bigness and expanse that has often been communicated to northern stories. The action, for the most part, takes place in semi-closeups, many of which are none too well lighted. The fight between David and the "brute" is well staged and the bear fight is a novelty, but just why Marge had to run across the snows (in the distance) and in her birthday clothes is hard to understand. Maybe this is the courage referred to in the title.

Pauline Starke appears as Marge, while Niles Welch is David. George Stanley, Billie Bennet, Jack Curtis, William Dyer, Boris Karloff and James O'Neill complete the cast.

Author's Name Is Best Bet in Advertising This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This picture is to be noted more for faults of omission than mere errors of commission, so on the surface it passes as a fairly satisfactory feature. The majority of audiences will probably accept it for what it is and so you'll have few kicks coming.

Naturally register Curwood's name in all the advertising and also mention the fact that Baree, his famous dog character, again has an importnt role in the story. Curwood has many readers and his stories are famous for just such novelties as the dog character and the bear fight.

You won't go wrong on playing up Pauline Starke, for, though she hasn't an awful lot to do here, past performances have made her quite a favorite. Niles Welch, too, has a reputation and you might use his name to advantage.

Splendid Light Comedy In Which Star Registers Big Hit

STORY.....High impossible even for comedy, but star and production make it highly enjoyable
DIRECTION ..... Very good
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Commendable

STAR.....Registers a wonderful hit as a comedian
SUPPORT.....Hedda Hopper splendid opposite—all commendable.
EXTERIORS.....Just a few street scenes to suggest London.
INTERIORS ..... Excellent
DETAIL.....Many fine touches in star's performance make it very unusual.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Breezy American takes ruined English earl's place and straightens out his affairs.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,500 feet

"The Man Who Lost Himself" in which William Faversham appears in a comedy role is a surprising treat. In the first place you have the idea that you're in for an hour of melodrama because of the title. Instead the picture establishes itself as an excellent light comedy with the star doing some wonderful business in a dual role. Incidentally it's time to rejoice. At least a picture producer has awakened to the fact that Faversham has few superiors in light comedy roles. They knew this on the stage long ago, but the picture producers have felt obliged to put him in "classics" in the past.

As a comedian Faversham can out-shine any other screen star doing the light type of stuff. He's working all the time and registering some comedy bit in every scene. He puts originality into his bits of business and he registers his comedy by facial expressions immediately recognizable as the result of long practice and ripe ability.

The story of this is highly impossible even for comedy, but the star, backed up by the entirely sympathetic production, put it over with a bang. This impossibility evinces itself in the original premise of the story—an American drummer outwardly the counterpart of a dissolute Englishman who has run his fortune into the ground, disgraced his title and caused his wife to leave him, assumes his place and gets away with it before family and servants.

The comedy that Faversham gets over as the American being initiated into the Englishman's altogether strange sphere is immense, and both the interest and the humor quicken when the drummer straightway proceeds to straighten out the lord's business and domestic affairs. His scene with the blackmailer when he snatches the forged check from him and eats it, the while holding the fellow off with one arm, is the climax of a long sequence of hearty laughs.

Nor is the love element neglected. The romance between the Englishman's wife who appreciates the change in the American over her dissolute husband is delightful and developed with a dash of suspenseful piquancy that is charming. In the end the American confesses his real identity and breaks the news to the Englishman's family that the real lord committed suicide. But the romance comes to a happy end.

Faversham has an admirable supporting cast headed by Hedda Hopper, who cuts a charming figure as the wife. The others are Violet Reed, Radcliffe Steele, Claude Payton, Mathilde Brundage, Emily Fitzroy and Downing Clarke.

Here's One That You Can't Go Wrong On

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Yon can't go wrong on "The Man Who Lost Himself." Two more pictures like this one and William Faversham would be established as one of the screen's foremost light comedians. No matter what luck you have had with his past pictures, don't fight shy of this. Your audiences are going to enjoy every minute of it.

You can make a big thing of this, too. Advertise it more heavily than you do the average and give it an extra day or two in the booking. Play it up as a comedy with such catch lines as "William Faversham in a comedy of luck, pluck and romance," "The story of an American drummer who assumed the place of an English earl and——."

In fact you make all the noise you want on this, confident that no one will accuse you of overestimating your show after the picture's been on a day or two.

"The Return of Tarzan" is a melodramatic diamond in the rough. Like its two predecessors in the Tarzan picture series it has small amount of polish from the standpoint of production. And even less convincing stories have been better shaped in the continuity than the present Tarzan work.

But when it comes to melodramatic thrills, of these "The Return of Tarzan" has a plenty. Two notable moments are when Tarzan does battle with two different lions, in each case a lady's life being at stake on the outcome. These fights have been very well put on and are inclined to send thrills and chills chasing down the spine. Of course the outcome of these fights is never in doubt. A villain may win over a hero, but not a lion. But the realism is there.

The story of this is propelled forward mainly through one character's ability to lie to another. They open up with Tarzan returning to France on an ocean liner. He incurs the enmity of a wretch, Rokoff, when he catches him attempting to cheat in a card game. In Paris Rokoff ties up with Clayton, pretender to Tarzan's rightful domains, and the fight is on. Through a lie they force Tarzan into a lady's bed chamber and subsequently into a duel with her husband. But the bullets have no effect on Tarzan, as he is unjustly accused.

Before he leaves Paris for the French possession in northern Africa he engages in a whirlwind fight with six or eight hirelings of Rokoff and Clayton, beating them into a collective pulp. Later he is again on a boat trailing Rokoff's villainous companion for the French government. Rokoff finally succeeds in knocking him overboard. Through an extreme case of luck, very extreme, Tarzan is cast up from the sea on the edge of his jungle. Then a fire on board a passing yacht, and Jane Porter, who loves Tarzan, is also cast up from the sea. He saves her from the lion for the happy ending.

There is much that is thrilling and novel in "Tarzan." There are some good scenes back in the jungle when Tarzan is shown renewing old acquaintances with the animals. These scenes present the choicest illusion of the picture. They make you feel them. For the rest it is a succession of thrills, big ones and little ones, but there's always something doing and while a much better production could have been their background, the present effect of the picture is satisfying to the melodramatic lovers.

Gene Pollar fairs well as Tarzan. Armand Cortez plots as Rokoff. Karla Schramm is pretty Jane. Others are Walter Miller, George Romain, Louis Stearns and Estelle Taylor.

Great Opportunities in This for the Real Showman

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Return of Tarzan" lacks a high class polish, but withal it is a stirring melodrama in the rough and as the first of this series went well this one certainly ought to go better with the same audiences, for if anything, and despite its lack of distinction, it is a better produced picture than the first.

You can cash in on a lot of publicity on this. Edgar Rice Burroughs' Tarzan stories are among the best known works written with the picture crowds. They are still running in newspapers and magazines. Cut outs can be used effectively as lobby displays along with stills from the production. The book store tie-up is also an excellent and logical means of exploitation in this instance.

Something suggesting the jungle in the theater lobby or in the way of stage setting will also prove effective. In fact here is a picture that offers many opportunities to the real showman. It can be made a big box office attraction.

CRITICISM from

The New York Evening Telegram

May 30, 1920

by JANE DIXON

"Last evening, in the grand ballroom of the Astor Hotel, Georges appeared for cinema championship of the world. Beyond peradventure of doubt his is no one-track talent."

A BIG SURPRISE

"The Carpentier picture was one of the biggest surprises Broadway has had in many a season.

"We are wise to the ways of capitalizing celebrities—hundred-thousand-dollar name—ten-twenty-and-thirty scenario acting, scenery and support. It always makes us feel as if some one had sold us a toy balloon and then stuck a pin in it.

"Robertson-Cole have not so imposed upon a hero-worshipping public. They have made it possible for us to see one of the most popular athletes of the day in action. This much we expected, but what we did not expect was to find in Carpentier a real actor, an artist with the finish of a French gentleman and the finesse of an habitual stage star."

THE WONDER MAN

"Such is the name under which Robertson-Cole, promoters of the film, have chosen to introduce their boxing star to an already sceptical screen world.

"M. Carpentier not only lived up to the title. He did more. He topped it. Three frozen-faced critics who are wont to use these twilight picture hours for malevolent meditation, were seen to rouse from their stupor and blink their eyes unbelievingly at 'The Wonder Man.' When our hero caused the villain to kiss the canvas for the fatal ten, one of these three ravens actually committed the critical faux pas of clapping his hands in approval just like an ordinary ticket-buyer. The mistake was overlooked on the part of his fellows owing to the heavy barrage of applause being laid down by a wondering and well-pleased audience."

"MILLION DOLLAR SMILE"

The Carpentier smile is bound to cause the hearts of several million matinee maids to skip a beat every time it lights up his frankly winning face. His is a personality so accentuated as to overcome the silence of the screen, to reach out and make friends among those who have merely meant to pose in the role of onlookers.

The story? Why tell? Suffice to say it is good, substantial, thrilling, sustained, and that it has to do with the French and the United States Secret Service.

DIRECTOR .....John G. Adolfi
AUTHOR.....Daniel Carson Goodman
SCENARIO BY.....Joseph W. Farnham
CAMERAMAN ..... George Benoit
AS A WHOLE.....Generally a very pleasant surprise—should register with sporting element.
STORY.....Not a lot to it but gives star chance to show his ring form.
DIRECTION.....Commendable—very good fight scenes.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS.....One bad sequence—rest O. K.
CAMERA WORK .....Good
STAR.....Appears very much at ease
SUPPORT.....Faire Binney pouts a little too much—others commendable.
EXTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
INTERIORS .....Very good
DETAIL .....All right
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Suspicion cast on hero for theft of important papers—turns out to be a member of French secret service.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,100 feet

So many celebrities from sporting and other circles who have entered the pictures have proven such flivvers that it is a pleasure to record that Georges Carpentier, European heavyweight champion and aspirant to the same honors in America, puts up a very good appearance before the camera, appearing quite at home and registering simple expressions that have stumped the majority of the others.

Of course "The Wonder Man" gives him an opportunity to show his fighting form. He is shown shadow boxing, sparring with his partner and going through the usual order of training stunts such as rope skipping and bag-punching. In the four-round fight staged during the picture he displays some lightning foot work and some clever punches that give an inkling as to his style despite the fact that his opponent is only the heavy in the story.

The plot by the way is a very simple affair and disappears altogether from view once or twice during the picture. When Georges hands his opponent the knockout the plot too goes down for the count and has a pretty hard time reviving. However, the interest in the story is quite well maintained. Some good comedy snatches have been injected that count largely in the story's favor.

The story concerns the mysterious appearance in Washington society of Henri (Carpentier), a French war hero. He incurs the enmity of Gardner, boxing champion of the country club, and has the stigma of suspicion cast on him for a theft of valuable papers. It doesn't take a great stretch of the imagination to figure out that Gardner is the villain who purloined the papers and that Henri is the man of the hour who finally brings him to justice and reveals himself as a French secret service agent working with the U. S.

The romance is well worked in and Faire Binney gives Carpentier enthusiastic support, although she is inclined to resort to her cute little pout a bit too much. The fight scenes are very well staged and look like flashlights of the National Sporting Club. The "extras" in the case were guests for the most part and the dress suits look tailored.

I'ts Just This: Do Your People Want To See Carpentier?

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Georges Carpentier in
"THE WONDER MAN"
Robertson-Cole

What you can do with this depends altogether on the character of your audiences. It seems as if the star ought to draw very well in downtown houses and attract attention from transients. In fact, the going ought to be good wherever there is a smattering of the sporting element. Carpentier has received a lot of publicity in the big cities and it ought to be a pretty easy thing for you to get extra publicity from the sporting editors on his picture. New York sport writers have given the picture considerable space.

Following the example of those handling the picture in New York you might also make an effort to secure the endorsement of your branch of the American Legion if this means anything to your audiences. In fact, as an exploitation card "The Wonder Man" has very great possibilities. The whole thing narrows down to a question, "Do your people want to see this man or not?" If they do the going should be easy.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,783 feet

"The Little Cafe," an adaptation of the musical comedy of the same name, produced in Paris, proves to be a picture containing a number of good comedy sequences, but which often lapses into the commonplace because of lack of imagination and the knowledge of what continuous comedy is on the part of those concerned in the production.

First there is a sequence well handled from practically every comedy viewpoint. Then the action takes on a commonplace appearance that registers little or anything. Thus it goes throughout. It really looks as if they had attempted to make an exact reproduction of the musical comedy and when they came to the parts where the music was important didn't have the imagination to fill in with original matter.

The idea of the plot is slight but one containing rich possibilities for this field of work. Max Linder appears as a water in the Little Cafe. An old servant of his uncle's home learns that he is to inherit a fortune and straightway cooks up a scheme to get a cut of the money. He goes to Max's boss and influences him to sign him up for twenty years with a stipulation in the contract that whoever breaks the agreement shall forfeit half a million francs.

So when Max learns of his inheritance all he can do is to stay on in the Little Cafe rather than make the forfeit. The rest of the picture is comprised of some good situations and some commonplaces, but the general effect is pleasing. Max at first tries to make the proprietor of the cafe break the contract by giving away his choicest liquers, but this plan fails. He then takes to going out at nights after work to other cafes, where he becomes known as an eccentric millionaire. The sequence in the cafe where he pretends to be a waiter to his party of guests in order to throw a lady friend off the right track is about the funniest of the lot.

Had the picture been produced by an American director more attention would have been paid to the romantic element, which is very poorly developed here. Even in this type of comedy, which contains some knockabout work, a romantic action thread is welcome and often necessary. However, the French director has presented a number of interesting views of the Paris streets that help to make up for his frequent lapses from the proper comedy vein.

The star is very good in the comedy sequences but is lost along with the humor when the director forgets. Wanda Lyon is the girl with little to do. The rest of the cast is made up of a group of players, some of whom have an excellent idea of what comedy is.

Satisfactory Entertainment Should Give Fair B. O. Showing

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You aren't going to establish any laugh records with this, but at the same time it stands a good chance of giving audiences average satisfaction in the comedy line. Its comedy sequences are good when they appear and the views of Paris help things considerably when the action is inclined to drag.

If you show this make a point of announcing that it marks the return to the screen of Max Linder, most popular comedian in France, after a long absence due to illness from war injuries. He has many admirers in this country and this first reappearance should attract from old time's sake.

Mention the fact that this was made in Paris and that it contains many scenes shot on that city's streets. Also note the fact that "The Little Cafe" was a stage play that met with some success here.

Elmo Lincoln in

SCENARIO BY.....Harvey Thew

AS A WHOLE.....Another sea picture which furnishes some excitement toward close, but otherwise hasn't much in its favor.
STORY.....Silent sacrifice stuff, not comprehensive DIRECTION.....Ordinary for the most part; handled storm scene very well.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK..... Good
STAR.....Can fight, but otherwise won't impress
SUPPORT.....Harry Van Meter a cowardly villain; Mabel Ballin his wife.
EXTERIORS.....Almost entirely aboard vessel
INTERIORS ..... Adequate
DETAIL.....Few errors in story sequence
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Sacrificing captain endures false accusation for happiness of villain's wife.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,800 feet

There seems to be a flock of sea going productions on the market just at this time. "Under Crimson Skies" makes the third in two weeks. Each one has the captain of a vessel for the central character, and in each instance he has ruled his crew with the violence made popular by London's character of Wolf Larsen in "The Sea Wolf."

However, in this they don't make so much of the captain's treatment of his crew. Instead a villain is introduced and the remainder of the picture has to do with his efforts to smuggle ammunition to the Mexican rebels. The story is very unconvincing and depends wholly upon the atmosphere of the sea to help it over. They have resorted to much artificial means to carry out the story. For instance, the villain is supposed to be accompanying a shipment of pianos which in reality are filled with ammunition. As a means of acquainting the captain with the fact that he is unknowingly carrying the deadly freight for the rebel troops, they have the child suggest to the captain that her mother sing for him, whereupon he proceeds to uncrate a piano because she cannot sing without accompaniment.

There is one sequence, a storm at night, which is very well handled indeed, and very realistic. The decks of the vessel are flooded and the rain keeps pouring down while the crew battle with the rigging. Later the fight between the rebels and the President's forces affords some excitement, but it's such a wild scramble that the spectator finds it difficult to keep track of just what is going on.

Clayton, his wife Helen, and their child were the only passengers aboard the Southern Cross. The rough Captain Barstow felt sorry for the wife and child, who seemed to mean nothing to Clayton. Barstow discovered that Clayton's pianos consisted of ammunition intended for Mexican rebels, but for the sake of Helen and the child said nothing. However, upon reaching their destination one of Clayton's gang had Barstow brought before the court for assault. Barstow was sentenced to five years.

He later made his escape and reached an island inhabited by beach combers. He beat their leader into submission and became one of them. Some time after he learned that Clayton and Helen were in the American consul which was being stormed by the rebels. He gathered together all the beach combers and arrived in time to save the consul. Clayton dies while trying to escape. A sort of epilogue flash shows Helen and Barstow together while a title gracefully indicates the happy ending.

May Get Over With an Easily Satisfied Crowd

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are willing to depend on the atmosphere of the sea and upon the fair amount of excitement contained in the slight revolution sequence you can probably get away with this. There is not much else for you to depend upon. You can say something about the terrific storm at night. This has been well handled and is good to look at. Elmo Lincoln's name may interest those who remember him in the Tarzan pictures. However, outside of his various pugilistic displays his appearance in "Under Crimson Skies" does not mean very much.

For catch lines try: "You have seen the various races of the earth in both scenic and feature productions, but have you ever seen the Beach Combers? They play a big part in the picture at the —— theater. Go and see them." Or, "He was a tyrant captain, but he could make a sacrifice. See how a rough man submitted to imprisonment for the sake of a woman in 'Under Crimson Skies.'"

PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Commendable
CAMERA WORK..... Satisfactory

EXTERIORS.....Suggest Africa well enough
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL..... Little of it
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Innocent man carries stigma of shame to save name of innocent girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,003 feet

"Thou Art the Man" is a picturization of a book entitled "Myles Calthorpe, I. D. B.," and from appearances it was rather an unfortunate choice for feature material. Not that it is lacking in action by any means. Quite the contrary, for here is a picture that goes far in the other direction and contains altogether too much. This is evidenced in the exceedingly jerky and episodic character of the production. The lapses of time during the story are nearly as frequent as its subtitles. Such a picture always has a difficult time holding the interest and "Thou Art the Man" fails in this time and again.

Myles is first introduced on an Australian ostrich farm. His suspicions that his employers are dealing in diamonds stolen from the mines cost him his job. Later in a nearby city he obtains a clerkship in the feather packing house of Farrant, Farrant being in league with his former employers, A romance develops between Myles and Farrant's sister, Jean, also unaware of her brother's illegal occupation.

After a while Myles plans a journey to another city and Farrant has Jean hand him an envelope supposedly containing legal documents to deliver at his destination. He is searched aboard the ship and diamonds are discovered in the envelope. Rather than bring shame on Jean, whom he is sure is innocent, Myles goes to prison for three years and suffers the ignominy of having the initials I. D. B. (Illicit Diamond Buyer) attached to his name when he comes out.

Myles secures another job under a different name, but after a time at a reception he meets Jean, who accuses him under his own name. Myles would seek seclusion but the brother of Jean's best friend helps him to bring the real I. D. B.'s to justice, after he has been assured that Jean will not be implicated. Then Jean goes to him and begs his forgiveness.

This brief outline of the story fails to convey an adequate idea of the picture's trying episodic character. No sooner is one sequence of scenes fairly well launched than a title indicates a considerable lapse of time, the interest is consequently broken, and the action begins all over again. It looks as if Margaret Turnbull had made an exact adaptation of the book, but in this case holding so to the original has not resulted in good picture material.

The role of Myles Calthorpe suits Robert Warwick but both he and the large and capable supporting cast are unable to do much with the story handicap. Among the others are Lois Wilson, Monte Dumont, Clarence Burton, Clarence Geldart, Harry Carter, Jane Wolfe, Dorothy Rosher, Viora Daniel, Richard Wayne and Lorenza Lazzarini.

May Get This One Over With Those Who Like The Star

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If your patrons are particularly strong for Robert Warwick pictures you may be able to get by with this, but it can't measure favorably along side of the average feature af the day. If you've got it all booked up lay stress on the fact that the action is laid in South Africa and that it deals with illicit diamond traffic. You might employ the initials I. D. B. in your advertising in the way of a teaser.

They've got some good stuff at the very start showing how it is possible to smuggle diamonds out of the mines despite all the care taken by the guards. This is real detail and it registers as very interesting. Afterwards, however, the action jumps around so much that the director didn't have many opportunities for more color of this sort.

Lois Wilson is quite a popular leading woman and she might be billed along with Warwick to advantage. They'll remember her from her many appearances opposite Bryant Washburn.

Awful Results from Attempt to Make Feature

SUPPORT ..... Passable

INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL ..... None
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Girl detective works way into gang of crooks and rounds them up
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"Wits vs. Wits" looks like a poor effort of poor amateurs. To make any sort of a showing these days a feature must attain certain standards, and these standards are set down as "average." This picture doesn't come anywhere near any of the accepted standards of the day.

It is meant to be a mystery picture. Instead the action is hopelessly mystifying. You gather after a while, however, that Marguerite Marsh is a detective. For this reason she has worked things so that she is employed by a gang of crooks as stenographer. And that is the way matters stand until the crooks, working through a bank cashier, have succeeded in drawing out of the bank much more money than they have to their account. Then Marguerite gives the alarm. Detectives enter and presto! The crooks are captured.

Just to cap the climax there is a sequence showing Marguerite explaining to the judge how she did it. And just to recap this, there is another sequence showing Marguerite in the august presence of a magazine editor to whom she has just finished reading her story, "Wits vs. Wits." And still again follows a title saying, "Story by Harry Grossman."

The plot of the story, that is its bare basis, is quite all right. But it isn't well developed and it has no meaty action to carry it along. What action it has is quite hopelessly jumbled by an atrociously bad introductory sequence that isn't introductory because it doesn't describe any of the characters or get them firmly planted in the spectator's mind.

There are many scenes showing the characters walking in and out of rooms and along the street. These stand out strongest after the picture is over.

And there is another flock showing Marguerite hammering away at a perfectly good typewriter in a style fit to put it out of commission for life.

These, however, are mere details. The whole picture reflects incompetency. The lighting is particularly bad and the photography none too good. The subtitles are poor. One reads "November 19," which means nothing at all.

Marguerite Marsh is the best thing about the picture, but her work, professional in most respects though it be, counts for little..

Looks the Same From All Angles

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The majority of the lesser attractions on the market have some redeeming feature about them. It may be a certain box office angle, a certain star, a certain big thrill or whatnot. But "Wits vs. Wits" doesn't seem to contain the slightest whisp of a sraw for an exhibitor to grasp at.

The popularity of Marguerite Marsh might have some weight, but the biggest star in the film firmament would have a hard time showing along side of the very poor material contained in this.

Neither story nor production contain any redeeming features that might be employed as advertising angles.

Realistic Backgrounds Generate Some Interest in Poorly Handled Story

Madlaine Traverse in
"THE IRON HEART"

DIRECTORS....Denison Clift and Paul Cazaneuve

AS A WHOLE.....Good backgrounds arouse interest in this, but story is poorly handled
STORY....Very simple plot; not developed expertly
DIRECTION.....Shows no contrast
PHTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Plain
CAMERA WORK .....Satisfactory
STAR.....Seen to average advantage in "man" role
SUPPORT ..... Satisfactory
EXTERIORS.....Contain fine atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Good iron foundry scenes
DETAIL.....Not much of it
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Woman fights iron trust because of loyalty to her employees.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"The Iron Heart" is a melodrama with a colorful iron foundry as the setting for many of its scenes, but which contains a very small degree of heart interest. This is due probably to the fact that in making this they paid hardly any attention to character development or plot details and went right ahead developing the elemental story in plain and commonplace style. Never during the picture's run are there lights or shades to be observed, there is no building with accumulative interest and suspense to the climax of scene or sequence. "The Iron Heart" was evidently written and produced in monotone.

The central character is Esther Regan, to whom has been bequeathed the management of the Regan Iron Works, famous for its stand against the trust. McAllister, agent of the trust, comes with arguments to buy out Esther, but instead is himself convinced of the benefits resulting from the independence of the company. He sees the contented condition of the workers, their happy children, etc.

So he resigns from the corporation and works for Esther. Moulton, head of the trust, starts a fight to break the Regan Works, using Cullen, Esther's superintendent, as a tool. An attempt on the life of McAllister is frustrated. Esther has contracted to deliver a shipment of iron to a building company on a certain date. Unable to disrupt the mechanism of the iron works, Moulton purchases a branch railroad running to the main line and thus believes the defeat of his rivals accomplished. Cullen blames this conspiracy on McAllister, but he convinces Esther of his loyalty. They finally triumph over the opposition by appealing to the loyalty of the Regan workers, who thereupon proceed to take the train of iron over the line to the main railrad despie the fight waged against them by Moulton's men.

The various scenes laid in the iron works possess a certain interest that is stronger, in some respects, than that generated by the rather poorly handled plot. These scenes are well photographed in the bargain.

The author has slapped big business on the wrist quite severely throughout the picture. Evidently he wished to balance matters up a bit at the end, and so stuck in a brace of subtitles that condemn the I. W. W. as an organizaion of crooks and thugs. Experiences of other pictures show that it is best to leave established political and economic organizations out of screen fiction.

Madlaine Traverse handles the role of Esther fairly well. George McDaniel is natural but not exactly the type for McAllister. Melbourne McDowell, Edwin Booth Tilton and Ben Deely are well cast.

Should Get Over as Average Program Feature

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This doesn't rank very high because of its rather poor treatement, but at the same time it is well to consider as a good program feature because of the interest its background will cause together with the fact that it is the first subject produced in some time that gives a sane picture of workingmen. So many producers have made this class of people out as raving maniacs that the change is welcome.

If you play this you might play up the various scenes in the iron works as features of the production. These will certainly arouse considerable interest. Regarding the story it would be a good idea to bring out th fact that it deals with an employer on very good terms with employees. A line such as "The story of a woman who fought a trust and won because of the loyalty of her workers" could be used advantageously. They seem to be putting this star in "man" parts. If your people have taken kindly to her in such a role before play her up in this character in the present instance.

Average Production Championing the Truth At Any Price

EXTERIORS.....Plain rural stuff used to represent Southern France.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Predicament young woman enters when she marries again believing first husband dead.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"White Lies" aims to prove that even those little fibs that one uses to avoid working pain and hardship to others should be done away with. The proving process is certainly convincing to the spectator, for never did a family get into more trouble with various husbands, babies and honor than does the Beaurepaire family of Southern France. Lies, aided and abetted by misinformation in the newspapers, are the sole forces that motivate the story.

Josephine, senior daughter of the family, loves Lieutenant Camille Du Jordin, but is shocked by the report that he has deserted his regiment on the battlefield. Josephine and her sister, Rose, have successfully lied to their mother about the condition of the family exchequer, so when Colonel Raynal, having purchased the estate, comes to take possession it shocks her considerably.

The colonel, being a fine man, offers to marry one of the daughters (which one is altogether immaterial with him) so that the Beaurepaire family need not be ousted. Josephine accepts him. He leaves for the front on his wedding night and that same hour Camille returns, proving himself a hero and giving the lie to the newspapers.

The newspapers come in handy again when they announce the colonel's death. Josephine and Camille are married secretly. A year passes and a baby comes, still secretly. Then the colonel reappears and surprises Josephine and Rose, who are playing with the infant. Josephine faints and Rose claims the child as her own. This sends Riviere, Rose's fiance, up in the air, as well it should, and he and the colonel decide that Camille is the guilty party.

Explanations then follow and the colonel sees the light. He offers Josephine a quiet separation, which she accepts, but he still remains as the "son" of Mother Beaurepaire.

Such is the story of "White Lies," and on the whole it is rather negative in effect. Some audiences will doubtless feel inclined to laugh at the disappearing fiance and husband act because it is employed twice during the story. On the other hand the picture is staged nicely and the emotional work of Gladys Brockwell and the character performance of Charles K. French as the colonel helps the piece considerably.

Others who appear are William Scott, Josephine Crowell, Evans Kirk, Violet Schramm, Howard Scott and Lule Warrenton.

This Interests and Should Please Star's Following

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This ought to give average satisfaction particularly before those who know and admire Gladys Brockwell's work. The story is not very dramatic, but its many intricacies succeed fairly well in retaining the interest over its full running time.

The title and the moral preached in the story furnish the clue for catch lines and teasers a bit out of the ordinary. Some on this order could be used: "Do you believe in the use of White Lies? Or do you practice frankness no matter what the hurt will cause," "She told a white lie to shield her mother's feelings. But this lie led to another, the second led to a third, and so on. What was the outcome?"

Give the star prominence and also mention the fact that William Scott again appears as her leading man. He has appeared with Miss Brockwell so often that he certainly must boast of quite a following.

Some Short Reels

"Let 'Er Go"—Mack Sennett-Famous Players

Followers of the slapstick comedy will find more than one opportunity to whoop it up in this Mack Sennett riot. A farm is the scene of the action, and the knockabout king has overlooked few opportunities to insert bits that draw laughter. Louise Fazenda, Bert Roach, Charlotte Mineau, John Henry, Jr., Billy Bevan and Billy Armstrong revel in a series of incidents which, while not linked together with very much of a plot, register in satisfactory style. The scene in which the fire-water and gasolene are imbibed by members of the cast, the escapade in the hay, wood cutting bit and final chase, with Teddy, the dog, figuring prominently, makes a fast finish. An improvement over some of the recent Sennetts.

"Impressions of Italy"—Mentor

Rome, the Gulf of Spezia and several Italian lakes furnish the scenes for this Mentor production, which unlike most of those turned out by the organization, is not hand-colored but tinted. Most of the famous landmarks of the Italian capital are seen it, the capitol, Basilique of St. Peter, Villa of the Medicis and others being included. Quaint houses of the shore are shown in the section devoted to the Gulf of Spezia, and that in which the lakes are seen has some excellent double and triple exposures. Commendable light effects and excellent photography feature the offering.

"Moonshine and Jailbirds"—Universal

Mexican border bootlegging activities, burlesqued, comprise a considerable portion of this two-reeler which has the laughs distributed judiciously over its footage. There are numerous original bits in the production, the scene in the prison, the escape of the inmates and others being funny. Billy Engel is the most prominent character and works zealously enough. The scheme of having the turtles carry the liquor and incidents directly near the border line help hold it up.

"Bear-Skinned Beauties"—Universal

Bathing girls appear in a scene dreamt by one of the characters and some of this takes place in a modiste's shop. Practically all of it is slapstick comedy, and while there are a few laughs in it, the greater part is of little value and consequently this fails to register very solidly. What is probably the funniest part of it is the portion in which the fellow carrying a number of boxes rolls along on a pair of skates quite nonchalantly. While not essentially new, it includes several laughable bits.

"The Emotional Miss Vaughn"—Pathe

Mrs. Sidney Drew, who is producing the "After Thirty" series for Pathe, is the central figure in the third of the set and gives a highly creditable performance. Together with John Cumberland, she puts the two-reeler over in fine style. At the finish they have stretched it out just a trifle too far, but that detail is easily remedied. Several situations of merit are included in the offering. The one at the theater, that at the restaurant after the show, he one in which Mrs. Drew suddenly displays a flow of emotion, and several others hold interest. The titles have been written well and enhance the production which is quite up to the mark. It is a really human comedy.

Pathe Review, No. 48

Of the six parts making up this Pathe Review, two have been used in previous issues of this screen magazine. The sections devoted to the cleaning of silverware, and slow-motion study of the French athlete, colored, have already been seen. One respect in which this reel is unusual is in that it has three colored portions. First comes one devoted to the Sequoia forests of the west, after which is seen the stuff dealing with the silver-ware. Following that, the manner in which the Frenchman handles various weights and the javelin is shown, and Dr. Ditmars discusses bats and the elephant, which interests. Spanish kiddies frolic about in another tinted bit of footage and like most other groups of youngsters, make up an appealing scene.

"Dropped Into Scandal"—Gayety

Although much of this Gayety single reeler does not arouse great enthusiasm, there are a few ideas in it that should be enough to put it over. George Ovey, featured, is seen as a flirt, who after being warned by the husband of a youthful bride to remain at a distance, is continually placed in positions that justify suspicion. Some of these incidents are humorous and the scheme of having another of the characters constantly looking into a key-hole, without an explanatory title, until almost the finish where the bit of liquor he is watching is seen, also helps. Craig Hutchinson directed.

"Dry and Thirsty"—Gayety

Lacking a meritorious theme and commendable incidents, this single reel comedy in which the short Billy Fletcher plays the leading role, fails to register very heavily. Most of it consists of a pursuit of some liquor by the featured comedian, and the finish sees him reclining on a chair in a hotel while a bell hop serves him with the desired refreshment. The plot has no particular climax and the incidents in most cases are not sufficiently unusual to merit praise.

"A Home Made Hero"—Christie

Several situations of value and a clever theme make this a highly satisfactory reel. Earl Rodney, J. Corey, Dorothy Devore and Eddie Barry are prominent in the piece in which several beach beauties are seen. Barry in the role of life-saver gets along entirely too well with a girl whose affection Rodney and Corey would capture. By a ruse the fact that Barry cannot swim is disclosed and his wife is also brought to the scene of action. Result: Barry is yanked out of the foreground. The girl, however, takes a liking to the man whose rescue Barry could not effect and sympathetically strolls off with him.

"Calling His Bluff"—Gayety

W. Scott Darling, who wrote the story for this reel in which George Ovey is featured, has again used the scheme of the big card game with wifey out of town, about which to build his theme. While there is only one incident in it that is entirely new, the rest of it has been woven cleverly and an acceptable comedy has resulted. Lillian Biron appears in this as Ovey's wife and holds her end of it up well. Towards the finish there is some good chase stuff and this should get over nicely as a whole.

"Waters of Destiny"—Robertson-Cole

One would be led to think by the title of this Adventure scenic that it is made up of water stuff. As a matter of fact, however, mountains and clouds have furnished the material for a considerable portion of it. The shots of the clouds are probably the best bits in it, one scene being especially good. A sombre note is struck in the production, both the atmosphere and titles being solemn. It is a dignified offering and a scenic in keeping with the standard set in the series.

Short Reels

"Under Sentence"—Universal

For plausibility, this western does not rank very high. Not only is the entire affair unreal, but with the scenes at the gallows included, there is a great deal in it that is gruesome. It concerns a young man who is about to be hung for the crime of his partner, who is also in the cell. The latter refuses to confess, stating that he lacks the courage. When the mother of the innocent man appears, believing her son to be the mayor of the town, he is freed and paroled to save his aged parent anguish. She visits the guilty man, causes him to repent and later write a confession. Finally when the guiltless fellow is about to be returned to the hoosegow, the other is found dead clutching the written confession. Business of cleared man rushing back to his sweetheart and departing mother.

"'Neath Purple Skies"—Universal

Differing from the usual two-reel western somewhat in construction and based on a highly satisfactory theme, this offering is practically certain to please those who follow the pictures laid in the wild section of the land. Alfred Regnier and Magda Lane play the leading roles in the offering, the plot of which centers about some of the provisions in the homestead law. The efforts of some unscrupulous operators to deprive the hero of his land woven cleverly about a romance make this quite interesting. It has enough action, the necessary love interest and a great deal of shooting which results in nobody being killed.

"Off His Trolley"—Universal

Built about the competition between a rural jitney bus and trolley car, this two-reeler has several incidents that are sure to elicit laughter—enough of them to get it over in most houses. J. A. Howe, who wrote and directed it, has furnished an acceptable theme and creditable incidents, many of which are out of the ordinary. At the start, the spectacle of the wealthy conductor and poor railway president, together with the motorman haranguing the other car drivers as to the lack of high wages, will cause hilarity. The business of fighting for the passengers, lifting a stout one onto the car with the aid of a derrick and others keep it going at top speed until the finish.

"New Screen Magazine," No. 69—Universal

This issue of Universal's magazine is likely to meet with approval, principally because of the cartoon at the conclusion. It opens with a bit of footage showing a new device whereby a vehicle may be steered by wireless. After that there is a part devoted to Frank Hague, Mayor of Jersey City, who is one of the sponsors of the institute for babes in that city. The laughographs are humorous subtitles of the type being turned out by more than one organization, but what is most unusual is the closing cartoon, the direction of which is credited to Leslie Elton. The animation of the caricature is remarkable, numerous little moves that are not ordinarily recorded being shown as the tramp character runs about what looks like a genuine apartment.

"The Last Bottle"—Universal

Prohibition has been used as a laugh-getter in numerous comedies and in this single-reel Universal in which Lee Kohlmar plays the principal role, they again employ it successfully. It concerns a solitary bottle of wine which remains in the hands of an anti-prohibitionist and the efforts of a party of men and women to partake thereof. His wife going out of town, his room is besieged by those who would imbibe. When she returns and observes the naughty goings-on, he makes his way to a place of loneliness to drink alone. He suddenly discovers that the bottle contains only tea and decides to absorb some "moonshine."

"Edgar's Jonah Day"—Goldwyn

Following in the wake of the first two of the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" comedies, it is only natural that this should invite comparison. While not quite as funny as the others, it certainly maintains the high standard and is intensely human. Any man who sees it will recall the time when he experienced the incidents depicted in it, from the untimely errand imposed by a hurried mother to the bluff at being asleep, which concludes it. The task of minding the troublesome younger brother is another part of the story that will bring titters as will the escapade with the old iron for which the junk dealer offers the usual ridiculously small price. Edgar's decision to run away, his return unobserved and the finish where he wins over his mother with his expression of innocence form other links in the chain of incidents, all of which are true to life—the feature of these productions. Johnny Jones as Edgar performs well. The performance of the child who plays Edgar's little brother is splendid and a credit to E. Mason Hopper's direction. Barbara Kent is responsible for the scenario.

Pathe Review, No. 46.

Made up of several unusually interesting parts, this Pathe Review reaches a high standard and ranks with the better issues of the series. Biskra, Algeria, is the scene of the opening colored section which has a few scenes in which the tinting is not especially good, but others that are excellent, one shot being splendid. In the slow motion picture an elephant is seen strolling forward. Despite the fact that one of the sub-titles says that his motions seem rather graceful, there is little in his waddle to justify that claim. What is of unusual merit is the footage devoted to birds. The movements of their wings and manner in which they rise are shown in fine fashion and make the sight one that is entertaining and of educational value. Dr. Ditmars discusses turtles in his usual manner. There is some stuff dealing with silver mining in Mexico, not particularly unusual, and Grace Christie interprets the "Spirit of Belgium" in a symbolic dance to finish it.

"She's a Vamp"—Reelcraft

Humorous stories have frequently been woven about the experiences of young boys with girls of but few years. The rapidly changing fancies and "Puppy Love" most people experience are cleverly dealt with in another two-reeler in which Matty Roubert is starred. This time he is a bootblack, living in a none too comfortable home and densely populated portion of a large city. When a youthful coquette rolls her eyes for his special benefit, Roubert's affections are transferred, but when the new "Flame" proves faithless, he returns to his old sweetheart, much humbled. The production is rather slow in a few spots, but otherwise holds interest nicely, is human and should secure booking.

New York—Before leaving for Cleveland Alfred S. Black of the Exhibitors' League called a meeting for Monday night at the Hotel Cleveland for 8 o'clock to decide the attitude of the League members to joining in one big convention.

F. B. Warren, general manager of Associated Producers is expected here hourly. He left the Coast last week, stopping at several points to arrange for the opening of the exchanges of the "Big Six."

Record Breaking Crowd of Exhibitors and Prominent Film Folk Throng Cleveland Hotel Corridors.

With every incoming train bringing additional delegates and visitors of importance there is every indication that Cleveland is about to witness the most important convention in the history of the film industry.

And there is every indication that harmony will reign. It is a fact that there are minor disturbances in sight, but from the general impression about the corridors of the several hotels last night where film folk gathered it was clear that efforts would be made to smooth out all difficulties and have a real working organization develop along national lines.

In an effort to bring this about the Committee of Arrangements, numbering 27, will meet this afternoon at the Winton. This Committee includes exhibitors from every important exchange center in the country. Not only are they members of the Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce, but also of the old or Black organization and the Independents formed in Chicago. It is not a secret that this committee was selected from data supplied by Wid's Year Book of last year.

The real work will start tomorrow. The Theater Owners' Convention is scheduled to start operations, and it is the hope of the more important exhibitors that both the Black and the Independent groups will affiliate and make the Hotel Winton meeting a general one with the idea of combining all factions into one working body along national lines.

And while all this is going on the National Association members will gather at the Statler.

Actual work started on Saturday afternoon when Sydney Cohen and others of New York met the Cleveland Exhibitors' League and discussed plans, etc., at the Winton.

Moore Busy on Plans

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—The formation in Delaware of Moore's Parkway Theater Co. and the Capitol Theater Co. last week was designed to provide for the two new theaters Tom Moore of the Rialto has planned for this city.

The Capitol is to be located on New York Ave. near 14th St., one of the "cream spots" of the downtown district. Every car in the city comes to this corner, or transfers there.

The directors associated with Mr. Moore on the board of this company will probably be the most representative board of directors in any theater in the business. This board will include high officials in public life and members of Congress, and will be announced shortly. The Capitol will be financed by Moore personally with the exception of 12 blocks of stock of $10,000 each.

The Capitol is expected to be unique as a theater proposition, in that it will be named after the United States Capitol and located in Washington, the capital of the United States. Also the lobby and foyer of this theater will be a replica of the front of the United States Capitol. It will be an expensive front as it will reach to the dome in construction approximately 125 feet high. Searchlight floods playing on the dome of this front will make it stand out so as to be seen from most any part of the city. The columns in this building will be of limestone and expensive materials.

This is the theater in which Moore plans to use approximately one change a month, or 13 pictures a year, each and every one of which is to be staged on a pretentious scale and to have its own set of scenery, lighting effects and atmosphere.

The Capitol will have a matinee and evening performance daily set aside for reserved seats where tickets may be purchased as far as a month in advance. The forenoon and supper show will be given on the continuous policy. Prices for these attractions will be 75c and $1. The mezzanine loge balcony will have a promenade rich in atmosphere and comfort with private hat racks in each box. The Capitol covers an area of nearly 200 feet deep by 90 feet wide.

The Parkway is Moore's own project, bag and baggage. He is expending the total amount of money needed for the erection of this theater himself. It covers an area of 90 feet wide by 160 feet deep. This is in the heart of the Mt. Pleasant district on the corner of Park Road and 14th St., which is the apex of the thickly populated section of Washington's representative people. The Parkway will be a replica of Moore's Rialto, 2,000 seats on one floor.

The First National shield will be both prominent on the front of the theater as well as a special model in all newspaper advertisements. In other words, when the advertising campaigns are laid out for the fall the entire chain of these model and progressive houses will have their announcements within a large circular First National chain drawn especially for the purpose, the houses enclosed as a whole within this circle. The trademark of First National will be put forward here in a manner so as to let the public know the full meaning of First National trademark.

Pushing R.-C. Project Ahead

Progress is being made on the Robertson-Cole building project, now under way at the corner of 48th St. and 7th Ave. By the end of the week the two buildings being torn down to make way for the 12-story structure will be entirely levelled, and work started on the excavation.

One Need, One Purpose
An Open Market

Assembled in Cleveland today is probably the most representative gathering of exhibitors that have ever heeded a convention call in the history of the industry.

And it is well that they are meeting. For never was the menace greater; never the need for considerate and decisive action more timely. It was well said yesterday: "Exhibitors will either get together at this convention or they can forget a national organization. For by this time next year there may have passed the opportunity to get together—the industry may be 'sewed up.'"

There is but one need, one purpose of the present gathering—to keep the market open.

Aside from this all else can well be forgotten. This is not the time for peanut politics or peanut politicians.

This is not the time to talk about bolting or bolters. This is not the time to worry over trifles. The smaller problems can be settled easily six months from now. As against the bigger and more important problem all else can be waved aside and taken up some other day.

There is only one job before the assembled exhibitors of Cleveland—and only one—organize into a national body that will mean something.

Get together!

And stay together!

The menace that brought about the call for the Patterson Chicago meeting is just as important today. Probably more important. For there will be more exhibitors here than at Chicago, more interests. But the need for the Chicago convention is as great in Cleveland. And that is to keep the market open.

There are movements afoot in the industry that may prove a menace beyond words. There is one sure way of checking or making inoperative these plans—and that is to have a national exhibitors organization definitely "on the job."

There is but one question before the house: Can such an organization be started here—now.

Gentlemen—Are you ready to answer that question?

—J. D.

A DECLARATION OF POLICY

ROBERTSON-COLE will not build, purchase nor otherwise acquire motion-picture theatres in any city in the United States, nor will we engage in the exhibition of motion-pictures for profit, unless—you, the exhibitor, force us to do so.

ROBERTSON-COLE demands the right to open and fair competition on the basis of merit and will only feel "forced" to acquire theatres where and when allied interests exercising a monopoly have eliminated competition.

ROBERTSON-COLE are merchants engaged in the distribution of motion-picture productions on a commercial brokerage basis, and we intend to adhere strictly to our field without digression or trespass.

ROBERTSON-COLE stands free of all entangling alliances and affiliations, and we fully appreciate the ideal position in which our independence places us. Robertson-Cole does not intend to jeopardize that position.

ROBERTSON-COLE has but one objective and is concentrating every ounce of energy upon it. We have no conflicting interests within our organization, and no connections outside of our organization that would divert our attention and influence the conduct of our business of distribution.

ROBERTSON-COLE believes in competition. Without competition there is no incentive to progress; and there should be progress in every branch of the motion-picture industry.

ROBERTSON-COLE believes the exhibitor should be encouraged to progress in building, improving and fortifying the prestige of the motion-picture theatre, and we are firmly convinced that to discourage the progressive spirit of exhibitors by an invasion of their field is dangerous to the long life of the industry.

ROBERTSON-COLE looks upon motion-picture film as so much merchandise, and are in the market to purchase the best class of this "merchandise" and to resell it to the Trade.

ROBERTSON-COLE looks upon the exhibition of motion-pictures as a theatrical and amusement enterprise—a class of business that legitimately belongs to the showman, and does not intend to invade that field.

ROBERTSON-COLE believes that dignity, commercial integrity and business honor should characterize every transaction between producers, distributors and exhibitors.

MR. ROBERTSON AND MR. COLE decided that the distribution of motion pictures was a class of business that they, as a successful commercial company aside from their film interests. with connections in every civilized country in the world, could handle to the mutual advantage of producer and exhibitor. They organized the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation to handle this business on a fair and equitable margin of profit, and it is on this basis and in the capacity of merchants that they will continue to be connected with the motion-picture business.

ROBERTSON-COLE does not use deposit money received from exhibitors in the furtherance of its business enterprises. We have unlimited financial resources and do not need exhibitors' money to carry on our business.

ROBERTSON-COLE places all deposit money in separate trust accounts; and a clause which we have written in our contracts absolutely prevents our using these funds until we have delivered the film that they guarantee.

ROBERTSON-COLE intends to invest whatever may be necessary to maintain a foremost position in the industry, and to safeguard this investment we propose to do everything possible to secure the confidence of our customers.

Bellaire, O.—In Martin's Ferry the Fenray and Pastime theaters decided to open on Sundays, but public sentiment and the city officials proved too much for the exhibitors.

Here in Bellaire, adjoining Martin's Ferry, exhibitors never asked or wanted Sunday shows, but the City Council last Friday night reported favorably on a license ordinance giving local theaters the right to remain open on Sunday from 1:30 to 11:30, with a $1.50 tax per seat per year. If the four theaters in town are willing the ordinance will pass.

The Sprague Amusement Co. controlling three theaters here does as much business in six days as in seven. And there you are.

Start Soon on "Heart Line"

Los Angeles — Work will be started on "The Heart Line," by Gellett Burgess. William Worthington will direct while Eugene Mullin prepared the scenario. It will be a Gibraltar Picture.

Ziehm Closes Another Deal

Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn, has closed the company's third year product for Australia and New Zealand. This includes Booth Tarkington's two-reel "Edgar Comedies."

Elmer J. McGovern has completed editing "Up in Mary's Attic," a Fine Arts release.

Coast Additions for Vitagraph

Los Angeles—An extensive building program for Vitagraph has been inaugurated by W. S. Smith, general manager.

Additional structures have been necessitated by increased production. Vitagraph will continue to maintain its Broklyn studios, but contemplates more elaborate production by companies now in the west.

The administration offices will be entirely renewed. A separate building will be erected for stars' dressing rooms. More stages will be put up, one to be a glass enclosed structure intended for the large sets.

Many permanent sets will be erected on the 10 acres recently purchased which adjoin the original Vitagraph holding.

Kent on Coast

Hollywood—S. R. Kent, sales manager for Famous Players, was a visitor at the Lasky studio. Kent is on a tour of the various exchanges of the company throughout the country, laying plans for the forthcoming season which opens the first of September.

Contest at Universal

Harry Levey is conducting a contest for the employees of his production department. Scenario writers, directors and cameramen, and those associated in the making of the picture, selected as the best, from the eight now in completion, will be awarded an increase in salary.

Pathe Forms "Literary Dept."

New York—Pathe has formed a "literary department," Mary Edith Butler and Curtis Dunham heading it. Pathe says a demand from newspapers and magazines for publicity for syndicating led to the organization of its "literary department."

Cohen's Attitude

competition with exhibitors. Patterson also wanted to know whether the Cleveland convention proposed to deal with the question of illegitimate screen advertising as its main topic, or whether it proposed to take up the problem of the invasion of the exhibiting field by the producing interests.

"I am glad," said Cohen in reply, "to have this opportunity of telling you that the convention in Cleveland will not confine itself to one problem, but will endeavor to deal with all of them. I want to say that not until now am I beginning to realize what a stupendous task it is to organize an exhibitors' body which will function in a national way. I hope we will not have another such disgraceful affair, as I witnessed in Boston. Let me say that the dominant issue at Cleveland will be to drive the producer out of the exhibiting field.

"I am not at all unselfish in supporting this cause. I have a number of theaters which I want to protect. Talk about bad conditions in the South. Why, gentlemen, since I have become active in the movement for the preservation of the independent exhibitors, one of my theaters had become the special object of attack on the part of certain producing-exhibiting interests. While I was in Albany looking after the Anti-Deposit Bill and a modification of the Children's Law, these interests got to work and gained control over one of my theaters. I find a good deal of this hostility from the interests that are seeking to put us out of business. I am in fact boxed in by these hostile interests wherever I turn and I expect that they will do their worst at the convention."

Replying to Cohen, who left a written statement as his answer to the questions of the committee, Patterson said he had nothing but admiration for Cohen and then congratulated him on his successful effort to put a stop to the Deposit System.

The Committee of 17 will be given a courteous hearing at the convention.

In the meantime, there is a strong movement on foot among the members of that Committee, said Cohen, to get rid of at least two men on the ground that they represent nobody but themselves and have in fact been repudiated by the two states they are supposed to represent.

COVERING UP

Harris Wolfberg, of Famous Players is having his troubles. Famous put through probably the best campaign of any of the companies in advance of the opening of the convention and the town was "papered" to a fare ye well. Everywhere you turned you saw some kind of paper of Famous or Paramount, and besides there were flaglets and leaflets and all sorts of material distributed. But when the local Exhibitors' League saw this paper plastered everywhere someone got busy and soon this paper was being covered up with something else wherever possible. The result: Wolfberg had to hire some men to see to it that his paper was left untouched. They have been kept busy—very busy—for the past two days but they will probably have a lot to do for the next few days as well.

WAITING

"The Return of Tarzan" is scheduled for a showing here tomorrow and Harry Reichenbach arrived this morning. Wnowing some of the stunts that he has put over recently with regard to the New York premiers of the production a good many people are waiting to see what Harry will 'pull" here.

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS' MEETING

At 11 o'clock this morning there was held at the Statler a meeting of the Board of Directors of Associated Exhibitors. Another meeting will be held in all probability tomorrow after the arrival of general manager Fred C. Quimby from the Coast where he has been closing several important matters.

Ben H. Grimm, of the publicity department of New York, is here arranging affairs and several others of the organization are expected today and tomororw.

Cleveland the Goal

Many New York Executives to Attend Conventions—Big Gathering Expected

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland—The stage is set for the opening of what will undoubtedly be the largest, in point of attendance, and the most important, in point of issues involved, exhibitor gathering ever held in the industry.

Those who figured on making hotel reservations upon their arrival in Cleveland are doomed to disappointment, for all the leading hotels are filled with film men either arrived or expected.

All those who expect to attend the exhibitor sessions at one or more of the various league headquarters are due in today by boat from Buffalo or train from New York and other points. The business sessions, according to schedule, will not open until tomorrow, but today will undoubtedly see a series of conferences by cliques of exhibitors and general discussions of matters to be discussed at the opening of convention business.

M. P. E. A. To Meet

A special meeting of the executive committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., will be held at eight o'clock tonight at the Hotel Cleveland, Cleveland, O., at which questions pertaining to the Cleveland convention will be discussed.

Alfred S. Black, president of the league, said yesterday before leaving for Cleveland:

"Many exhibitors have expressed the desire to me of holding one convention in Cleveland: one big mass meeting at which matters of common interest can be threshed out.

"Whether that can be accomplished or not depends entirely on the attitude of certain individuals."

Exhibitor conventions to be held in Cleveland have been cut to two instead of three by the amicable agreement reached between the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., and the Motion Picture Theater Owners' Ass'n, Inc.

The second convention is that of the Black organization.

A Lasky Forecast

"Our leading authors have been willing to accept the very large financial rewards offered by the screen, but have not been willing to accept the duty of learning to tell their stories in the language of the screen. They have a responsibility to discharge to their followers, who, seeing the name of a writer advertised as the author of a motion picture, go to see that picture in the belief that the author actually wrote it. The screen has a technique of its own, vastly different from that of the novel or the stage play, and the author who neglects to learn, evades a definite responsibility to his public.

"In the not distant future it would not surprise me to see all of our foremost authors writing directly for the films, and then adapting their picture stories to the stage, or rewriting them as novels."—Jesse L. Lasky.

Coast Additions for Vitagraph

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—An extensive building program for Vitagraph has been inaugurated by W. S. Smith, general manager.

Additional structures have been necessitated by increased production. Vitagraph will continue to maintain its Brooklyn studios, but contemplates more elaborate production by companies now in the west.

The administration offices will be entirely renewed. A separate building will be erected for stars' dressing rooms. More stages will be put up, one to be a glass enclosed structure intended for the large sets.

Many permanent sets will be erected on the 10 acres recently purchased which adjoin the original Vitagraph holding.

Pathe Forms "Literary Dept."

Los Angeles—Considerable opposition has developed here over the existing "zoning" laws which restrict building of business establishments, including studios, within certain limits of the city.

Edward S. Curtis, president of a company known as Cosmos Art, wants to build a studio in a section that is not now in the picture zone and a special zone must be created if Curtis is given permission to build.

E. Richard Schayer, former Goldwyn screen author, has been added to the Benjamin B. Hampton scenario department.

Pathe's Feature Business at Peak

The peak of its feature business was attained during May, according to Pathe, who says bookings for May showed an increase of 33 1-3 per cent over March, "Brunet Month," which upset all previous business in the annals of Pathe. During March the 32 Pathe branch offices averaged a gross increase in all business over November, December and January of 45 per cent.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Winnipeg—A teaser campaign with novel twist that consisted in using ıe street cars to exploit a First Naonal picture recently resulted in the acking of the Allen theater for a olid week.

For a week preceding the showing, ed-lettered signs appeared in the treet cars with this inscription: "She anced." That was all; nothing ıore.

At last the secret which had the atives mystified came out with an nnouncement in the Winnipeg Triune. This is what it said:

"Today the why and wherefore of ıose signs is revealed. It is this: 'he Idol Dancer' danced in her own ıimitable South Sea Island way and ıe also regenerated a poor beachomber who had fully made up his ınd to go straight to the dogs, via ıe gin route.

"All this and much more will be eheld on the screen at the Allen 'heater all next week in David Wark riffith's latest masterpiece, 'The Idol)ancer,' a First National Exhibitors' 'ircuit attraction, in seven reels."

"'She Danced' to make the picture nd 'She is Dancing' with the picıre," continued the statement. "This tatement is explained by announcıg that the Kalakoia troup of Haaiian singers and dancers will arrive om the east tomorrow afternoon nd showings of 'The Idol Dancer' ill be accompanied by their act.

"'The Idol Dancer' will wake 'em ll up in Winnipeg next week."

And she did, as a result of the ineenious plan employed to arouse pubc interest.

Omaha, Neb.—A large safe placed ı front of Goldberg's Sun helped exloit "Alias Jimmy Valentine" durıg its run there. Fifty silver dollars ere placed in it and a placard was ut over it, bearing the statement ıat anyone who could open the safe ould receive the equivalent of its ontents. A safe company provided he safe and expressage, realizing ıat it would profit by the arrangeent as well as the theater. Similar e-ups should be easy in other places.

Grand Forks, N. D.—During the un of Edgar Lewis' Pathe production, "Other Men's Shoes," Stan rown, managing director of the ouse, had an unusual exhibit of shoes laced in the lobby, showing those sed by American troops in Siberia, andals worn in India, Mexican, utch and all other varieties of footear. Window displays and other sual adjuncts of a successful exloitation campaign did their share.

Omaha, Neb.—Showing "Water, Vater Everywhere," Manager R. A. allantyne of the Moon theater, this ity, built a grave, with a huge ainted bottle as the headpiece, and put it at the outer edge of the sidewalk in front of his house. A huge dummy camel helped emphasize the picture. A water wagon, plentifully labeled, was driven about the streets. The ticket office was covered with signs such as woul dbe seen in a wild west saloon after prohibition.

When he showed "The Great Air Robbery," Mr. Ballantyne rented a big airplane and parked it in the street in front of his house.

Detroit, Mich.—A card with matter printed on it boosting "The Silver Horde," with ticker tape wound around it proved quite a novelty. Harry R. Guest, Goldwyn press and service representative here, originated the scheme. The cards, about 4,000 in number, distributed proved novelties and helped put over the picture. Having the cardboard assume the shape of a ticker machine is a good idea, but even in the original form it is a novelty, and a good Wall Street symbol. The "Wall St. versus the North" slogan being one of the features of the advertising of the production, the connection is easy to discern.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Following the booking of "The Vigilantes," at the Unique, Alfred Chapman, a veteran scout and guide, said to be the only white man alive to have seen Custer's last stand, was engaged. Chapman was stationed before the house with his collection of frontier relics, hides, weapons and similar articles, secured in the vicinity of the territory where the picture is laid. Interest was stimulated by this scheme and as a result the film was well received.

Omaha, Neb. — Manager Harry Watts of the Strand recently had to extend the run of "Why Change Your Wife?" from ten days to two weeks when he put it on in connection with a style show. At the same time he made a permanent increase in the admission price to his house. Omaha theaters are believed to charge the lowest admission prices of any motion picture houses in the country.

For a week before the picture came a contest was conducted by the Omaha Daily News, eighty prizes being offered by the Strand theater and the newspaper for the best answer to the question, "Why Change Your Wife?" The contest was limited to married people and the essays of not more than 200 words in length were to be arguments against divorce. The 80 prizes varied from $25 for the first prize down to a score of free tickets to the Strand.

Manager Watts put twenty twenty-four sheets, occupying every available billboard in the city. He also had his artists make some attractive filler signs to put in a transom space above the doors leading from the lobby of the theater into the main auditorium. He advertised the show extensively in the newspapers in conjunction with the Burgess-Nash department store, which was conducting the style show.

ture Theater Owners' Ass'n have been here since Saturday getting things lined up for their meeting which opens tomorrow.

New York this week is going to be like the proverbial "Deserted Village" so far as film executives are concerned.

Judging by the number of executives who will attend the Cleveland meetings, it is quite apparent the big producers and distributors in New York are not attempting to minimize the importance of the exhibitor gatherings.

While some of the heads of the companies are going to Cleveland for the annual meeting of the National Association, it is quite definite that all of them will watch the exhibitor confabs with considerable interest.

In some circles it is said that the calling of the National Association meeting for Cleveland simultaneously with the exhibitor meetings is in order to offset any action taken by the exhibitors.

"Billy" Brandt, president of the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce, left New York on Saturday with about 50 members of the chamber. They went via the lakes from Buffalo.

Harry H. Buxbaum, New York exchange manager for Famous Players, had plans all set for a party of his own. "Bux" left on Saturday with parties of up-state exhibitors waiting to join him on the way out.

Famous Players' home office dispatched its own delegation last night. In the party were Jerome Beatty, director of publicity; Charles E. McCarthy and Gordon H. Place of the publicity department; Claude Saunders, in charge of exploitation; Al Lichtman, in charge of distribution, and Sidney R. Kent, sales manager, who returned from a transcontinental tour of exchanges Saturday morning.

Attached to the train which left the Pennsylvania station last night at 7:50 were three special cars. Two of these carried westward members of the National Association.

Among those on the train were Arthur S. Friend, Ralph Kohn, Gabriel L. Hess, Charles C. Pettijohn, Sam L. Morris, William Wright, Herman Robbins, N. J. Baumer, Albert Lowe, Paragon Laboratory; Will C. Smith, Nicholas Power Co.; Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the National Ass'n; Jack S. Connolly, Royal K. Fuller and John S. Spargo, special representative of the A. M. P. A.

The third had a party of First National officials, members of the home office staff and the various trade paper editors. Included in that group were Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Clark, A. M. Fabian, Jr., Lieut. "Jim" Anderson, J. L. Hunter of the franchise department and Carl J. Hudson.

Another special car leaves tonight with prominent N. A. M. P. I. members including William A. Brady, Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Richard A. Rowland and others.

Felix Feist, sales manager for Goldwyn, and Harry L. Reichenbach also left yesterday. Reichenbach will show "The Return of Tarzan" in Cleveland.

Metro will be represented by W. E. Atkinson, general manager, and E. M. Saunders, sales manager, while A. S. Kirkpatrick, general manager of the Robertson-Cole Dist. Corp., will be on the ground for his organization.

Fred C. Quimby of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., left Los Angeles late last week to reach Cleveland in time for the opening sessions. John S. Woody, general manager of Realart, will represent his company.

Associated Producers, the latest of the important producing combines, will have its president and general manager, Oscar A. Price and Fred B. Warren, respectively, around the convention halls. Marshall Neilan may also stop off on his way to New York from California.

Change Title of Tyrad Film

"Broken Hearts" is the title selected by Tyrad for the feature hitherto called "The Scar of Shame," in which Lucille de Tar is starred.

The rights to the Zip comedies have been bought from Radin by the South African Trust Company for South Africa.

A Saturday Evening Post story, "You Never Can Tell," from the pen of Grace Lovell Bryan, has been selected by Realart as the initial starring vehicle for Bebe Daniels.

Prohibits Cummins' Film; Injunction Sought

Arguments in mandamus proceedings brought against Commissioner of Licenses John F. Gilchrist by Samuel Cummins, owner of "Some Wild Oats," will be heard this morning.

Gilchrist revoked the license of the Harris theater, leased by the Selwyns to Cummins for the exhibition of the picture, on the ground that the film was indecent.

Cummins was granted an injunction Saturday in the Supreme Court, but it was issued too late to offset the recall of the theater's license. He says that if his picture is banned from the Harris he will lease another theater and continue the performances. Cummins claims that health officials endorsed the picture and made suggestions for its betterment.

Other instances of picture exhibitions in which Commissioner Gilchrist stepped in and prevented showings were "The Finger of Justice," produced by Dr. Paul Smith and showing 'Frisco's Barbary Coast dives, and "Fit to Win," which played at the Grand Opera House, Brooklyn.

Buys Rights to Radin Films

Dallas, Tex.—The Specialty Film Co. has bought the rights to "Thru Eyes of Men," in which Frank Mayo is starred, for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, as well as the series of "Real Star Dramas" for the same territory.

City Government May Sponsor Enterprise—Co-operative Plant Planned

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

San Francisco—This city may officially and financially take part in a new project which provides for the erection of a big studio here designed to be the first step in capturing producing companies now making their headquarters in Los Angeles.

The matter was discussed at a luncheon of the Down Town Association in the Hotel St. Francis.

A. W. Scott, Jr., is endeavoring to line up private capital in an effort to raise approximately $400,000 with which to erect a co-operative studio along the lines of the Brunton plant in Los Angeles. Scott named some very glowing figures as representing the amount of money involved in the picture business in Los Angeles. He said companies had invested about $150,000,000 in plants and equipment; that the weekly payroll of Los Angeles studios reached $1,250,000, and that a like sum was expended in new productions every week.

Perhaps the most significant angle on the entire manner is the fact that at the luncheon was Andrew Gallagher, representing the City Administration, who said the city authorities were ready to aid in the enterprise.

They Took the Tip

"It is significant to note," remarks Julius Singer, manager of the local Reelcraft office, "that following my remarks about lowering the prices published in WID'S DAILY last week, the admissions at the Capitol ere decreased. I predict that many others will follow the example."

Singer is patting himself on the back with great frequency these days.

Dorothy Cummings, who appeared in "Tiger, Tiger," will play an important role in "Idols of Clay," a George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount.

Rifkin of Boston Trying to Get Independent Exchange Men Together

Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Co. of Boston, has called a meeting for tomorrow afternoon at the Winton in an effort to organize independent exchangemen into a compact working force. He said he had 18 who would start the ball rolling and expected to put the plan over before leaving.

NEW STARS FOR ASSO. EXHIBITORS

According to an official high up in the Associated an announcement is expected from Fred Quimby, who is due to arrive from the coast today, in regards to three new stars for that organization.

Sincere Efforts Being Made To Bring About Harmony---First Session Today---Nat'l Assn. Meets Today.

All set and ready to go.

With the most representative gathering of exhibitors ever in attendance at any convention ever held, prominent as well as small showmen from all over the country are ready to go to work today to form a real national exhibitors' organization.

There will possibly be difficulties, for conditions are far from harmonious. But several moves were made yesterday to bring satisfactory conditions about.

Yesterday morning the special committee of three from the Chicago convention conferred with Frank Rembusch, going over the situation, and Rembusch was agreeable to a single convention.

Yesterday afternoon the Committee on Arrangements met at the Winton at 4 o'clock preparing for today's opening session, and last night Alfred S. Black had members of the original Exhibitors' League in session at the Cleveland to settle the question of whether they would agree to a joint convention.

There is every indication that all of the exhibitors bodies will at least start in a joint convention. Dependent entirely upon what happens in the Committee on Resolutions will determine whether it is possible for harmony to exist, although this battle may occur right on the floor.

Meanwhile the National Association will start its annual meeting this morning. And there promises to be some fun there, too. There is some talk that Wm. A. Brady will refuse to serve another year as president. There is also the possibility of a determined effort to bring radical changes in the entire organization with the purpose in view of a more aggressive policy.

Dominant in the exhibitors convention will be one subject—opposition to theatre owning producers. Other

GETTIN' MAD

Frank Rembusch, the Hoosier gladiator, was on his way through the Cleveland lobby yesterday morning when his eye was attracted by a sign which read

"Remain an Independent Exhibitor.

Book Paramount Pictures."

Frank took one look. Then he got busy. He pulled down the sign, walked to the center of the lobby and kicked a hole in it that made its value negligible.

Then he strolled away with the expression of a man who had done his duty.

As To Finances

Just how the proposed national organization will be financed is taking up considerable time. Several suggestions were made yesterday morning that might bring something definite about.

From Texas came this suggestion: That the proposed association should be divided along the same lines as the country is divided on a percentage basis. Then each section should raise its necessary quota. "If," said the exhibitor who offered the suggestion, "a fund of say $100,000 was needed for the organization Texas as a 4 or 4½ per cent territory would be called on to raise, say, $4,500 for the national treasury. I'll guarantee to raise that much and more in 10 days. I'll underwrite such a plan myself."

Another plan suggested was to have the independent film exchanges throughout the country act as collectors for a tax to be charged on each shipment of film that went out. The man who offered this suggestion said: "Suppose it was agreed upon that exhibitors should pay one per cent or one-half per cent, or whatever the figure was, of their rentals, to the treasury of the national organization. And suppose the film shipped cost him $25 a day. All right, the exchange men would charge him an extra 25 cents, and in turn forward this amount to the treasurer of the national body. This looks small, but many a nickle makes a muckle. The exchange men would in all likelihood be glad to do this. They should be glad to do something that keeps them in business. It's little enough, Lord knows."

Another well known exhibitor from New England said that it would be impossible to operate unless a substantial sum for dues was pro rated to exhibitors and he doubted very much the possibility of making collections from exhibitors. Getting dues was, he said, almost an impossibility from exhibitors. Some plan other than yearly dues was, in his opinion, necessary. And the sum must be sufficiently substantial to make an exhibitor become interested.

IN THE LOBBIES

Nathan Hirsch, of Aywon Film, New York, was on hand at the Winton. He will take a trip to the Middle West from here immediately after the convention closes.

"Choe" Lee, the celebrated of Educational, jumped all the way across country from Boston to get an idea of what the affair was all about.

One of the United Artists crowd of publicity men—and there were a bunch, Paul Lazarus, Charley Moyer, Ken McGaffney and Carlyle Robinson—pulled that well known and time stained stunt of having "Doug" Fairbanks paged at the Winton.

Tom Meighan is scheduled to arrive and will put up at the Cleveland.

Someone said "Nick," the Astor grill head waiter, was coming tomorrow, just to make the place look familiar.

Earl Hudson, of First National, by some unusual stunt secured 16 refund tickets of the Penna. lines because his train was late. Ask him how he got them.

Watterson R. Rothacker, the lab expert, dropped in on his way to Europe. He sails next month. Incidentally it developed yesterday that once upon a time "Watty" was a director. No—not of film production, but in the Ingleside Dancing Academy, West Side, Chicago. But that was long ago—long before he became a magnate.

THE MORELAND AMUSEMENT COMPANY, INC.
Capitol Stock $100,000.00

K. Moreland, Vice President and General Manager

May 19th, 1920.

Mr. C. E. Holah, Mgr.,
First National Exhibitors' Circuit,
Omaha, Nebraska.

My dear Holah:—

Your letter in regards to what I think of the new franchise of First National received.

Now, about the worst thing that I could say, is that I have bought these franchises for every house that we operate, and that I was looking at a mighty good theatre yesterday, in a certain small city, where there were two houses. This house was a big bargain, but I did not buy, because the other house has the First National Franchise.

With a combination of 5,000 theatres, all pledged to one Cause, there is no star or director, and no other Company or Combinations of other companies, making or showing pictures that can compete with First National.

As we can afford to pay any star more than any other concern, we will have our pictures sold before we ever attempt to contract for the star, and at a price that will be fair to our members.

As far as selling this Franchise, I would not take $10,000 for any one of them that I own.

If you are in the business to stay, you need one. If you are going to sell your business, the Franchise will make your house worth 100 per cent more.

Respectfully yours,
(Signed) K. MORELAND,
Vice President and General Manager.

LYDA THEATRE

May 17th, 1920.

A. H. Blank Ent.,
Omaha, Nebr.

Gentlemen:

Just a word as to my views on the First National Sub-Franchise, and why I asked for the Franchise for my town.

First—First National's past productions have as a whole, all been the very best and biggest money makers on the market, and if this was accomplished by a few Franchise Holders, guess what it will be with 6,500 Independent Exhibitors holding franchises.

Second—Actual Independent Exhibitors interested in the purchasing and distributing of features, we will be able to give our views as to the kind of feature that the masses want, and our head officers can thereby purchase money makers, instead of lemons, such as machine made features turn out.

Third—It will give us protection from Wall Street Capitalists, who are trying to drive us to the Wall by building and buying theatres with our Deposits.

When I receive my Franchise, I will feel that I am assured the biggest and best features to be had, and at the least cost.

I'll feel that I have an Independent Organization back of me, big enough to whip Wall Street, and if they try to enter this town.

I'll feel that I will get fair treatment, with no more Film Board of Trade to haunt me.

I know that I will not have to put up any more deposits. That's why I signed for a Sub-Franchise.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) S. A. HAYMAN.

Dear Mr. Holah:

I want to again thank you for the many courtesies and the personal attention you showed me while I was in Omaha. I also wish to thank you for letting me in on this big franchise plan of First National's, as I consider it the best step I have ever taken in the Motion Picture game.

Your franchise plan is so far ahead of any other Franchise Plan that there is no comparison.

I have gone into this very carefully, and have studied it from every possible angle; with the live wires that are behind this move, I cannot see how it can prove anything but a big profit in all exhibitors' pockets.

We have the best stars on the screen today, without any exception, and you may feel assured of my hearty co-operation at all times; I will place our pictures in any of the new houses I may obtain.

I am sure you will have no trouble in selling the remainder of our franchises, if the exhibitors go over this matter as thoroughly as I have, for after an investigation, any exhibitor would admit the great advantages of this plan.

Hoping that we will soon be 100 per cent in this territory and with real confidence in our mutual success, I am,

Yours very truly,
W. H. Ostenburg.

Inasmuch as Marcus Loew was due to arrive Tuesday Fred Klein, manager of Loew's Stillman, Cleveland's leading cinema house, called a meeting of his janitor force and carefully laid down a campaign whereby every absent light in his lobby as well as the interior of the theatre would be immediately re placed. Klein also started a force to work on removing gobs of chewing gum from the carpet at the entrance of the theatre with the remark to his men that "thousands of particular" exhibitors would be visiting Cleveland's representative film palace. Klein welcomes the invasion with visions of every exhibitor paying his way to inspect the Stillman.

questions will come up, but the big one on which all factions are apparently united is to get together and fight this movement.

Yesterday was a day of meetings. The first was that of "The Committee of 17" at the Cleveland. Frank Rembusch presided. The committee's report to be presented to the convention today was read by Rembusch. The gist of the report amounted to the fact that they were out to "get" producers who were operating theaters.

The convention opens at the Winton this morning at 10:30. First will be an address by the temporary chairman. The Mayor of Cleveland will then present the key to the city to the assembled exhibitors. Adjournment then until three in the aftrnoon. The committee of seventeen's report will be the first business taken up in the afternoon session.

The second meeting yesterday was presided over by Alfred S. Black. He stated at its conclusion that he and his faction had decided to go into the convention with the idea of making one strong organization. He mentioned that if this meant a personal sacrifice on his part he was willing to make it.

The third meeting was held by the New York delegation. At its conclusion it was stated that the Committee on Arrangements and Registration will announce that only 100 per cent independent exhibitors will be allowed in the meeting. Sydney Cohen announced that he as well as the other two factions wanted to see one powerful organization spring from the gathering.

BORZAGE'S IDEALS

Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque," which has just opened a run at the Criterion theater, in speaking of the A. M. P. O. said in part:

"I think that every picture should run its length. If the story calls for seven, eight or nine reels, that should be the length of the picture. If, on the other hand, the story can be well told in three reels, why shouldn't that three-reel feature be exploited as a special feature?

"There should not be an arbitrary rule to the effect that no so-called feature should exceed six reels nor be made in less than five reels. Many good stories are, in my opinion, entirely spoiled by the insistence upon a set of standard length."

PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE has been builded as an institution. Its foundations are laid on solid rock of service, entertainment, and constructive thought. It has always stood for and influenced public opinion for clean and honest pictures.

President Frohman Amusement Company,
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Sherrill:-

With a confident belief in its mutual advantages, may I congratulate you on your contract with Miss Lillian Gish, by which she is to appear in a series of productions.

The talents and experience Miss Gish brings to your pictures are to widely popularly known to need comment. She is an able and preserving student of her art, a qualification that should do much to establish her enduring success.

Her preparation for this large area of personal activity is substantial. I can see no reason why you should not develop the achivements you desire.

Sincerely yours,

D. W. Griffith

COOTIES!

BY JAMES R. QUIRK
Editor of Photoplay

At first the cootie was considered harmful only in that he annoyed and weakened the fighter. Then it was found that he spread a virulent poison, a deadly toxin. The vigilant medical corps isolated him, put him under the bright light of the microscope and proceeded to find an anti-toxin for trench fever for which he was directly responsible.

The motion picture industry has its cooties, too. The blue sky picture promoter, the direct descendent of the old lightning rod man and the gold brick artist is abroad in the land. And he is spreading a poison that unless we check it, will bring a harvest of shame on the industry which is builded on America's greatest contribution to the art of the world.

With little or no experience these oily individuals, too incompetent to become real producers, are using the newspapers of the country and the mails, with glowing accounts of the millions to be made in pictures, advertisements which seem credible enough to the uninitiated and generally kept within the law.

Millions, literally millions, have been taken in by these disciples of Jesse James.

They are breeding a deadly poison. We must bring these fakers out into the light. Then it will be easy enough to find the remedy, or better still, the prevention.

If we do not act soon more millions will be stolen from the public. And the poison will be increasingly harder to fight.

PUTTING IT OVER

Omaha, Neb.—A large safe placed in front of Goldberg's Sun helped exploit "Alias Jimmy Valentine" during its run there. Fifty silver dollars were placed in it and a placard was put over it, bearing the statement that anyone who could open the safe would receive the equivalent of its contents. A safe company provided the safe and expressage, realizing that it would profit by the arrangement as well as the theater. Similar tie-ups should be easy in other places.

Grand Forks, N. D.—During the run of Edgar Lewis' Pathe production, "Other Men's Shoes," Stan Brown, managing director of the house, had an unusual exhibit of shoes placed in the lobby, showing those used by American troops in Siberia, sandals worn in India, Mexican, Dutch and all other varieties of footwear. Window displays and other usual adjuncts of a successful exploitation campaign did their share.

Omaha, Neb.—Showing "Water, Water Everywhere," Manager R. A. Ballantyne of the Moon theater, Omaha, Neb., built a grave, with a huge painted bottle as the headpiece and put it at the outer edge of the sidewalk in front of his house. A huge dummy camel helped emphasize the picture. A water wagon, plentifully labeled, was driven about the streets. The ticket office was covered with signs such as would be seen in a wild west saloon after prohibition.

When he showed "The Great Air Robbery," Mr. Ballantyne rented a big airplane and parked it in the street in front of his house.

Detroit, Mich.—A card with matter printed on it boosting "The Silver Horde," with ticker tape wound around it proved quite a novelty. Harry R. Guest, Goldwyn press and service representative here, originated the scheme. The cards, about 4,000 in number, distributed proved novelties and helped put over the picture. Having the cardboard assume the shape of a ticked machine is a good idea, but even in the original form it is a novelty, and a good Wall Street symbol. The "Wall St. versus the North" slogan being one of the features of the advertising of the production, the connection is easy to discern.

Winnipeg — A teaser campaign with a novel twist that consisted in using the street cars to exploit a First National picture recently resulted in the packing of the Allen theater for a solid week.

For a week preceding the showing, red-lettered signs appeared in the street cars with this inscription: "She danced." That was all; nothing more.

At last the secret which had the natives mystified came out with an announcement in the Winnipeg Tribune. This is what it said:

"Today the why and wherefore of those signs is revealed. It is this: 'The Idol Dancer' danced in her own inimitable South Sea Island way and she also regenerated a poor beachcomber who had fully made up his mind to go straight to the dogs, via the gin route.

"All this and much more will be beheld on the screen at the Allen Theater all next week in David Wark Griffith's latest masterpiece, 'The Idol Dancer,' a First National Exhibitors' Circuit attraction, in seven reels."

" 'She Danced' to make the picture and 'She Is Dancing' with the picture," continued the statement. "This statement is explained by announcing that the Kalakio troup of Hawaiian singers and dancers will arrive from the East tomorrow afternoon and showings of 'The Idol Dancer' will be accompanied by their act.

" 'The Idol Dancer' will wake 'em all up in Winnipeg next week."

And she did, as a result of the ingenious plan employed to arouse public interest.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Following the booking of "The Vigilantes," at the Unique, Alfred Chapman, a veteran scout and guide, said to be the only white man alive to have seen Custer's last stand, was engaged. Chapman was stationed before the house with his collection of frontier relics, hides, weapons and similar articles, secured in the vicinity the territory where the pictur laid. Interest was stimulated this scheme and as a result the was well received.

Omaha, Neb.—Manager H Watts of the Strand recently ha extend the run of "Why Ch Your Wife?" from ten days to weeks when he put it on in con tion with a style show. At the s time he made a permanent incr in the admission price to his h Omaha theaters are believed charge the lowest admission pr of any motion picture houses in country.

For a week before the pic came a contest was conducted by Omaha Daily News, 80 prizes b offered by the Strand theater and newspaper for the best answe the question, "Why Change Y Wife?" The contest was limited married people and the essays o more than 200 words in length to be arguments against divo The 80 prizes varied from $25 for first prize down to a score of tickets to the Strand.

Manager Watts put out 20 sheets, occupying every avail billboard in the city. He also his artists make some attrac filler signs to put in a transom s above the doors leading from lobby of the theater into the m auditorium. He advertised the s extensively in the newspapers conjunction with the Burgess-N department store, which was ducting the style show.

D. W. GRIFFITH

—is now only about one-half through with the making of his tremendous super comedy production, "WAY DOWN EAST," and already has taken more than 185,000 feet of film.

—This is an indication of the gigantic picture he is preparing, in which will appear such prominent players ar Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmess, Burr McIntosh, Creighton Hale, Mary Hay, George Neville, Porter Strong, Edgar Nelson —and a surrounding company of thousands of supernumeraries.

—"WAY DOWN EAST" will be Mr. Griffith's most important spectacular production since "Hearts of the World," and those who have been privileged to see the scenes already secured are enthusiastic in declaring that it will be another "Birth of a Nation."

Producers–Not Competitors

Los Angeles, June 7th,

Associated Producers Inc. is not the "Big Six." Already it comprises seven producers: Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Marshall Neilan, Allan Dwan, George Loane Tucker, Maurice Tourneur and J. Parker Read, Jr. The organization is builded flexibly to make room for such additional big producers of established repute and power as may deserve to have their selective distribution. Associated Producers, Inc., will not now or at any future time compete with the exhibitor showmen of America by leasing or purchasing of theatres in which to present their productions. Our organization will produce big, selective productions for established showmen to show to the public. Our organization will join you as exhibitors in your very proper resentment over being forced to compete with producers seeking to wrest the business of exhibiting away from you. In our first releasing year beginning Sept. 1, we will produce and release a minimum of thirty of the ablest and biggest productions ever made—pictures on which we will be proud to stake our collective and individual reputations. F. B. Warren, General Manager of Distribution of Associated Producers, Inc., arrives in Cleveland June 8th to tell the assembled exhibitors of our policies, plans and productions.

Here in California each exhibitor who has been told of our sales policy has approved it without one reservation and exhibitors have come from as far away as Pittsburg to sign contracts. Our entire branch office organization goes into operation in twenty or more cities July 1, and our branch managers will be announced the last week in June. The address and location of our New York home office will be announced next week in the trade journals. Until that date you may address Mr. Warren by telegraph or letter at the Hotel Astor, New York. We believe that no first run factors in America will desire to sign contracts for another company product until they know the full details of our productions and sales policies.

Expiditing C. O. D. Shipments

Washington—W. J. Barrows, acting third assistant postmaster general, has sent a letter to the postmasters of all cities where exchanges are located, with the view of having insured C. O. D. shipments of films properly prepared, so as to prevent delay. The circular follows:

"From complaints received from postmasters it would appear that the occasional delays sustained by insured and C. O. D. shipments of motion picture films are in a large measure due to the fact that containers in which the films are shipped are not properly prepared and addressed. It appears that these are frequently used without the old labels having been taken off or the new labels placed on the container so as to thoroughly cover up the old label.

"It is requested that you take up with the motion picture film manufacturers, distributors and exchanges in your city, the matter of properly preparing their shipments so as to prevent delays thereto. Extreme care should be exercised to see that the names and addresses of senders and addressees are legibly and clearly shown, and that any previous addresses or indicia on the container are removed or thoroughly crossed out so that the postal employees handling the parcel will not be confused as to the correct address.

"Labels or wrappers should be so addressed also that the name of the sender will not be confused with the name of the addressee, which frequently happens, with the result that parcels are returned to the senders without having been dispatched to destination.

"Labels and postage stamps and C. O. D. tags should be securely affixed to the container so that they will not become detached in transit.

"In any instance, where motion picture films sent by insured and C. O. D. mail are not properly addressed or prepared, please bring the matter to the attention of this office."

Messmore Kendall Affiliated With Author—Wolper Interested

It was announced yesterday that Messmore Kendall, president of the Moredall Realty Corp., owners of the Capitol theater, and Robert W. Chambers have formed an organization "for the purpose of making, presenting and exploiting motion pictures based upon the published works of the latter."

This announcement is of particular interest in view of the fact that Isaac Wolper, who is now associated with Mr. Kendall in the new C. Gardner Sullivan company, announced last fall that he had secured exclusive rights to 44 stories written by Robert W. Chambers. WID'S DAILY published that announcement on Sept. 18.

Although Wolper at the time was president of Mayflower, the Chambers deal was understood to be a separate transaction entirely.

An official of the Capitol said yesterday that he believed Wolper and Kendall had joined hands on the proposition. Kendall could not be reached for a statement yesterday, neither could Wolper at the Astor.

John W. Noble, who directed the first Vivian Martin production for Messmore Kendall, will direct the Chambers stories. He expects to make about two a year. It is understood the Kendall-Chambers combination will announce shortly the acquisition of an important Eastern studio.

Meeting Tomorrow

The formal meeting of United Artists Corp. will be held tomorrow in the corporation's offices in the Godfrey Bldg.

A meeting was held yesterday, but no business was transacted.

Cummins Wins Out

An injunction was granted yesterday to the Social Hygienic Films of America, Inc., Samuel Cummins, president, restraining Commissioner of Licenses John Gilchrist from interfering with the showing of "Some Wild Oots," which opened at the Harris theater last week.

The injunction granted Cummins by Justice Whitaker prevents Commissioner Gilchrist from revoking the license of the Harris theater which Cummins leased from the Selwyns for the exhibition of his picture.

Justice Whitaker was prompted to grant the injunction in Cummins' favor because of the affidavit the latter submitted in which he said that the picture was made with the approval and knowledge of the New York City Board of Health and that he had offered to sell the picture to the Board of Health for $5,000, a sum which, Cummins said, would not even cover the production costs.

East is controlled by Selznick. Certainly by the acquisition of the new studio Selznick is the largest individual producer in the East.

The Paragon plant can accommodate four companies, as can the old Universal plant. The Solax studio accommodates two units and the Biograph several more.

The producing units now in the West under direction of Harry Rapf will be brought East and are expected to be here by July 1.

Among the Selznick productions now at work are those starring Olive Thomas, William Faversham, Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien, Owen Moore and Louise Huff. In addition work has been started on "Wilderness Fear," a special production directed by Burton George, and "Red Foam," a Ralph Ince special in which Zena Keefe is playing the leading role. Four Herbert Kaufman Weeklies are nearing completion and preparations are already under way for work to start on four more.

Special Showing at Ritz

There will be a special showing of "The Restless Sex," with Marion Davies as star, in the grand ball room of the Ritz Carlton tomorrow evening at half past eight. It is a Cosmopolitan Prod.

George Barr McCutcheon, author of "Sherry," a Pathe release, says this regarding filmed versions of stories:

"It is a trifle hard on writers to see our work tampered with, but when it is done artistically we should not complain. Much latitude must be allowed in screening novels to bring out the different incidents in fast sequence to hold the interest of the spectator."

Culver City—Four companies are at work on Thomas H. Ince productions. Enid Bennett's current vehicle, "I Wonder If—," marks her last picture under the supervision of Ince.

Horater Making Changes

Toledo, O.—Harvey C. ("Doc") Horater, managing director of the Alhambra theater, is making plans for next season.

The Alhambra will close on July 1 for a short time, to be redecorated, remodelled and repainted. New draperies will be installed and a $25,000 Hope Jones Unit organ will be installed.

Horater thinks the coming year will be the biggest in the history of the business and says the prices asked for productions, so far as he is concerned, cut no figures so long as the productions are good. He states that producers from whom he has heard say they intend making fewer pictures for the fall season.

Coast Brevities

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Hollywood—Geo. Weston's Saturday Evening Post story, "Girls Don't Gamble Any More," has been secured by the D. N. Schwab Prod. for David Butler's third starring vehicle.

Irene Rich is to support Tom Moore in that star's next Goldwyn picture. She has just completed a role in "Whispering Smith" for American.

G. Allan Gilbert, illustrator and poster artist, is working out an entirely new style of art titles for Winchell Smith's "The Saphead," his new Metro production.

Director George L. Cox of the American Film has finished work on "Whispering Smith," by Frank Spearman.

Ira H. Morgan, first cameraman for King Vidor, has been loaned for one picture to Donald Crisp, directing Monroe Salisbury.

Florence Deshon completes work this week in the leading feminine role of a Fox production with William Russell and goes to the Katherine MacDonald studio for a role in "Curtain."

The serious illness of Frederick Starr has necessitated retaking the scenes of "The Money Changers," in which he had appeared, and the substitution of Stanton Heck in the role.

E. F. Warren, character actor, has been engaged by Tod Browning to support Priscilla Dean in her "Outside the Law."

An allegorical production, "Friendship," is being filmed by Allan Dwan, the Mayflower director-producer, for the Unity League, the newly formed Anglo-American organization.

The Allan Dwan company has returned from Camp Keen in the mountains south of Riverside, where the first scenes were taken for the sixth and last Dwan production for Mayflower.

R. W. MacFarland, western manager for Mayflower, has announced that all Mayflower productions with the exception of those at present contracted for, will be released through First National.

D. N. Schwab Productions have closed contracts with the Saturday Evening Post for David Butler's third story, and work will be started on the new picture soon.

Lloyd Carleton Prod. have purchased "Beyond the Cross Roads," by Bradley King, for its second production.

An article recently carried in the West Coast Brevities section to the effect that H. Tipton Steck is the author of "The Mischief Man," should state that the original story is by Elmer Forst and the scenario prepared by H. Tipton Steck.

Walter Hiers will play an important part in "So Long Letty," which Christie is producing for Robertson-Cole.

Borzage's Ideals

Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque;" which is now running at the Criterion theater in speaking to the A. M. P. A. said in part:

"I think that every picture should run its length. If the story calls for seven, eight or nine reels, that should be the length of the picture. If, on the other hand, the story can be well told in three reels, why shouldn't that three-reel feature be exploited as a special feature?

"There should not be an arbitrary rule to the effect that no so-called feature should exceed six reels nor be made in less than five reels. Many good stories are, in my opinion, entirely spoiled by the insistence upon a set of standard length."

A pre view of "The Hope Diamond Mystery," the fifteen part serial written by May Yohe, will be given in a Hollywood theater shortly.

"So Long Letty," the first of the Christie specials, goes into production next week.

Harry Gribbon, long a featured comedian with Mack Sennett, has joined forces with the Christies and is at work in a new Christie comedy under the direction of Al Christie.

The first of the new Christie comedies has been completed and the negative is being sent to New York.

The fourth episode of Charles Hutchinson's 15 episode serial, now being produced by Robert Brunton, has been completed and work will begin immediately on the fifth.

M. C. Levee, vice-president and business manager of the Brunton studios, has returned to Los Angeles after an extended business trip to New York, where he closed contracts with a number of producers who intend to make their headquarters at the Brunton plant shortly.

Hugh Ryan Conway, who is directing B. B. Hampton's production, "The Money Changers," at the Brunton studios, has sent his assistant, Virgil Hart, to San Francisco. Hart will film several hundred feet of Chinatown's dwellings, etc., while there for the Oriental sequence that occurs in this picture.

The negative of J. Warren Kerrigan's ninth Brunton production, "The House of Whispers," has been shipped east.

Ward Crane, who just finished as leading man for Anita Stewart in her two latest pictures, leaves California this week for New York.

Frank Lloyd has commenced work on "The Great Lover" at Goldwyn's. He leaves this week for San Francisco to do some shipping scenes.

Charles Ray and his company have left for Santa Cruz, where scenes for Ray's current picture are to be made.

—is now only about one half through with the making of his tremendous super comedy production, "WAY DOWN EAST," and already has taken more than 185,000 feet of film.

—This is an indication of the gigantic picture he is preparing, in which will appear such prominent players as Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmess, Burr McIntosh, Creighton Hale, Mary Hay, George Neville, Porter Strong, Edgar Nelson—and a surrounding company of thousands of supernumeraries.

—"WAY DOWN EAST" will be Mr. Griffith's most important spectacular production since "Hearts of the World," and those who have been privileged to see the scenes already secured are enthusiastic in declaring that it will be another "Birth of a Nation."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

As a result of an advertising contest between theater managers, said to be a new wrinkle in the show game as played in New York, Keith's Prospect, Brooklyn, shattered all records with a week's run of "The River's End" and advance sales at Keith's Green Point are the greatest in the history of that house.

To the Keith manager who can show the best advertising and the greatest results derived on engagements of this picture a cash prize will be awarded.

Ordinarily the two neighborhood theaters stick to a split-week policy, but in order to have a better opportunity the managers each booked the picture for a solid week. By doing so they thought they could show bigger results.

The picture first went to the Prospect. It was heralded in the usual way on the screen, in the house program and in the newspapers, but Manager Harry Crull did not stop after that. He hired four men, all six-footers, dressed them in the picturesque uniforms of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police of Canada and made them patrol the front of the theater throughout the engagement.

He made the lobby reflect the atmosphere of the picture, hemlock and pine trees being artistically arranged in it. In a corner of the lobby was a Chinese dope joint scene, made to resemble as closely as possible that which figures in the film.

Crull's scenic artist visited candy stores, soda fountains, etc., where he painted on the mirrors scenes from "The River's End."

At each performance during the week Kranz and La Salle, vaudeville artists, sang the song, "The River's End," and music appropriate to the picture was played by the orchestra.

The outcome of it all was that Crull not only played the picture a solid week for the first time in his theater's history, but he was able to report the biggest business it had ever done. The picture goes into the Green Point this week.

Manager Leon Kelmar has been getting in his exploitation early. He has announced a prize contest for the best 30 written appreciations of "The River's End" from patrons of the theater. These announcements were made in the newspapers, in the program, on the screen and in speeches from the stage. Everybody in the neighborhood of the Green Point knows of the contest.

Kelmar borrowed several mail sacks from the postoffice and placed these conspicuously in the lobby to receive the written opinions of theatergoers. These expressions will be sent to Marshall Neilan in Los Angeles by parcel post.

He is also planning a special lobby display for the engagement, asserting that he will spring a few "surprises." The stage is nearly all set at the Green Point, and now it looks like a neck-and-neck race between Kelmar and Crull for the cash prize.

Detroit, Mich.—The price of 20 kegs and tags and some space in the local publications was all of the expense incurred by the management of the Adams. The keys, bearing tags on which was written "No. 13. Keep this key and look in 'Lost and Found' columns of the Free Press. It has been lost by the woman in Room 13." In the publication referred to were the words, "Finder please return to the Adams and receive reward." It was a stunt to help boost "The Woman in Room 13," starring Pauline Frederick, and those who returned keys were given two seats at a performance of that film. The same trick can be pulled almost anywheres.

Los Angeles—A seven column headline in the Record, staring readers in the face made known the fact that to the person who found Jimmy Valentine, a prize of $100 would be offered. The story was on the first page and told that the mysterious Valentine was to arrive in town next day and mingle with the people. It was through the cooperation of Jack Callicott, managing director of the Kinema, that the stunt was put over. A description of the man was given, of course, and the tremendous publicity served to make Bert Lytell in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" a success at that house.

In the Courts

The Robertson-Cole Company has filed a summons in the Supreme Court against the Northern Pacific Railroad. The cause of the suit is not shown.

An answer has been filed in the Supreme Court by the Exclusive Features, Inc., in a suit of Frank M. Sanford and L. C. McHenry, in which the defendant makes a general denial of the charges.

A default judgment for $2,681 has been filed in the Supreme Court against the United Pictures Producing Corporation in a suit by the Yale Press to recover a balance due for printing between Feb. 27 and April 12.

The litigation between the Universal Film and Charles Abrams and Ramms, Inc., because of the alleged unauthorized purchase by Abrams of a number of Universal films from its Boston office, has been settled and on the application of the parties Justice Whitaker has signed an order discontinuing two suits.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation and Metro Pictures, which were sued for heavy damages by Walter F. McCaleb, historian, because in the play "Our Own United States" the titles made it appear that McCaleb regarded Aaron Burr as a spy, whereas McCaleb tried to show in his history, "The Aaron Burr Conspiracy," that Burr was only a filibuster and not a spy, have won an important point in the suit through a decision by Supreme Court Justice Whitaker. The court strikes out as immaterial many of the chief allegations of the complaint.

In the suit of Aso B. Kellogg as trustee in bankruptcy of the General Film Contracting Co. against the Parex Film Corp. to recover a sum alleged to be due, the defendant has filed an offer to permit judgment for $1,750 to be taken against it. The offer was signed by W. L. Sherry as president.

The C. B. Price Co., Inc., has moved from the Times Bldg to 1446 Broadway.

Asks Injunction Against "Hottentot"

Because Famous Players-Lasky Corp. refused to buy his play, "Gallops," for film purposes on the ground that it is almost identical with William Collier's play, "The Hottentot," David Gray has filed suit in the Supreme Court against Victor Mapes and William Collier, authors of "The Hottentot," and Sam H. Harris, the producer, for an injunction restraining them from continuing the production unless he receives full credit and gets royalties from it.

Last February he put "Gallops" in the hands of an agency for the sale of the motion picture rights and about that time he got $800 from Mapes for suggestions taken from his play for "The Hottentot."

When Famous Players-Lasky turned down "Gallops" because it was too much like "The Hottentot," he says he went to see the play and found that instead of taking only a few ideas Mapes has used the entire play, because 11 of the 12 characters correspond to his own and only the names have been changed. For this reason he says his play is rendered valueless for film purposes. He says that Mapes has offered him $700 to withdraw "Gallops" from sale for the films.

Carroll Again Upheld

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has affirmed the decision of the lower court holding that Earl Carroll is the author of the film play, "12:10," and directed the Republic Distributing Corp. and the British-Colonial Films to file a bond for $5,000 to insure the payment to Carroll of any royalties found to be due him when the case is tried.

The lower court also directed the defendants to put Carroll's name in a conspicuous place on every positive

BLACK OUT

Says Screen Advertising Plan Was Accepted by Convention and His Organization Will Retain Its Own Identity

In a letter forwarded to this publication late last night, Alfred S. Black, president of the M. P. Exhibitors of America, says:

"A mass meeting of the three Exhibitor Organizations was held today with the assurance that personal interests and personal feelings would be eliminated and one big Exhibitors Organization be perfected, in harmony, so necessary at the present time.

"Much to my great surprise the most brazen 'railroad methods' were adopted from the start by Mr. Cohen

ZUKOR TALKS

Tells Rembusch Why Paramount Has Been Compelled to Buy Theaters—Says He Doesn't Want to Become Exhibitor

Accidently last night about 9:30 o'clock, just after he had finished dinner, Adolph Zukor met Frank Rembusch in the lobby of the Cleveland.

Immediately they started discussing why Paramount was buying up theaters. And before the discussion closed Smith, of the Whitehurst chain in Baltimore and several others were plying Mr. Zukor with questions. During the discussion the Paramount head did not seem perturbed or upset, and the discussion was still under way at the hour of going to press.

Rembusch will in all likelihood report to the convention this morning the conversation which occurred. Briefly, it is understood that Zukor told Rembusch that Paramount did not wish to own theaters, that neither he nor Paramount wanted to become exhibitors, and that Paramount had only bought houses where it was necessary to have Paramount pictures shown.

ASSN. MEETING

National Body Elects Directors But No President—Other Matters Transacted

At the annual meeting of the National Association of the Motion Picture Association, held at the Cleveland Hotel yesterday, a committee was appointed to co-operate with any or all exhibitors' associations, with a view to combining the full strength of both ends of the industry in any movement in which they may be mutually interested.

It was made plain that this committee was not created for the purpose of attempting a reconciliation between the two branches in the old question of amalgamation, but rather to more efficiently co-operate on vital questions of general interest such as censorship, and the necessity of a liasson between them.

Lesser Sides with Exhibitors

Sol Lesser has issued a statement defining his position on the demand of the exhibitors that producers shall not invade the exhibiting field and vice versa. In his statement Lesser asserts that he is an exhibitor first, last and all the time and in future will confine his activities exclusively to exhibiting.

Lesser's financial interests are much heavier in the exhibiting field than in the production end. At the present time in association with Gore Bros. he owns the Kinema at Los Angeles, the New Downtown, Apollo and Windsor in Hollywood, and a new $3,500,000 theatre now in course of construction at Los Angeles.

In conclusion, Lesser's statement says that producers have no more right in the exhibiting field than the wholesaler has to enter the retail end in commercial lines.

Neilan in East

New York—Marshall Neilan, accompanied by his attorney, Alfred Wright, and "Jim" Grainger, have just arrived from the Coast.

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation
16 FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK
THIS IS A GOLDWYN YEAR

Sir:

The Morning Telegraph says: "Jes' Call Me Jim" is an excellent combination of humor and pathos. The picture confirms a suspicion that we have had for a long time — that Will Rogers is our favorite screen actor.

Goldwyn

IN THE LOBBIES

Felix Feist of Goldwyn spread his happy smile at the Winton and seemed glad to be on hand.

Phil Ryan of Associated Exhibitors, dapper as ever, was noted at the Statler behind a cloud of smoke. Said he was very busy. Looked it.

Carlisle Robinson, Fairbanks' Beau Brummel publicity man, exumed the old, old one of acquiring fame through the bell boy chorus.

He was getting along splendidly and Doug was being paged every fifteen minutes around the Winton lobby. Quarters were passing over the bellhop palms at the same speed.

Then somebody raised the ante on the bell captain and Billy West, Flora Finch, and Ben Turpin, were paged long and loudly.

"Why th' hell can't these cheap press agents originate something themselves instead of stealing my stuff," he complained, and he walked out in disgust.

Harry Reichenbach, all the time, was reading the framed notices that he got for Prof. T. R. Zann and his Steinway lion.

Meier Bing, of Detroit, walked about with his chest well out.

Bing is proud and says he has a right to be.

He's opened a new theater in Detroit a few months ago, The Oakman Boulevard.

Benjamin Knoble, who owns five houses in New York, says he likes children to come to his picture houses.

"I have a matron at each one of the theaters to take care of them," he says.

"I like children in the theater. The more the merrier."

Val Raysburg, of Dayton, isn't the only exhibitor who likes the small town better than the big city.

"I left New York to run a movie theater in Newton, N. J., a town of 4,500," says S. E. Samuelson, who as secretary of the New Jersey Exhibitors' League, said the fight against the producer-exhibitor was organized in four weeks.

Hilliker Company Formed

New York—Katherine Hilliker, formerly title writer for the Chester productions, has just formed a new company called "Hillikeriters." Raymond Harris and H. H. Caldwell are associated with her. It is understood they will do titles and continuities. Caldwell is on his way East from the Coast.

Selznick Gets Paragon Studio

New York—L. J. Selznick has just closed a deal securing the Paragon studio. As previously announced Selznick will produce only in the East. He now has four studios at work in the East and is the largest Eastern producer.

Miron Selznick is on the Coast to arrange for bringing East the various producing units and to secure new stars and directors.

Lesser Arrives

Sol Lesser, of California, is mixing with the crowd. Just got in from the Coast and is very happy over his Beban and Kellerman productions.

Stunts

One of the stunts which has attracted attention was framed by Maurice Myers of the Sol Lesser New York office. Myers had printed a lot of fake telegrams, one of each was deposited in what looked to be a Western Union envelope and was put in the box of every visitor at the various hotels. The "Keller-grams" as they were termed proved to be a communication from Sol Lesser telling that in his opinion his Beban and Kellerman productions were winners.

"Married Life" Luncheon

The special showing of the new Mack Sennett five reeler, "Married Life" after a luncheon at the Statler, in the grand ball room, proved very successful yesterday afternoon. There was a big orchestra and special souvenirs for those who attended.

English Arrivals

New York—Harry Ward and Henry Cunday of the Cinema Sales Corp. have arrived from London to close several big film deals.

Looks like those exhibitors may somewhere—unless somebody throws monkey wrench.

Carpentier Sees Print

Georges Carpentier, who is h with the circus, had never seen complete print of his Robertson-C production "The Wonder Man," it was arranged to rig a project room in his private car and show to him. He was delighted when saw it Tuesday night.

A LASKY FORECAST

"Our leading authors have been willing to accept the very large financial rewards offered by the screen, but have not been willing to accept the duty of learning to tell their stories in the language of the screen. They have a responsibility to discharge to their followers, who, seeing the name of a writer advertised as the author of a motion picture, go to see that picture in the belief that the author actually wrote it. The screen has a technique of its own, vastly different from that of the novel or the stage play, and the author who neglects to learn, evades a definite responsibility to his public.

"In the not distant future it would not surprise me to see all of our foremost authors writing directly for the films, and then adapting their picture stories to the stage, or rewriting them as novels."—Jesse L. Lasky.

LATITUDE

George Barr McCutcheon, author of "Sherry," a Pathe release, says this regarding filmed versions of stories:

"It is a trifle hard on writers to see our work tampered with, but when it is done artistically we should not complain. Much latitude must be allowed in screening novels to bring out the different incidents in fast sequence to hold the interest of the spectators."

The action of the association was unanimous and the following committee was appointed by President William A. Brady:

Adolph Zukor, chairman; Charles Pettijohn, Martin Quigley, Samuel Goldwyn, Watterson R. Rothacker, Jos. Behrman and Fred Beecroft.

On the motion of James R. Quirk a "Vigilance Committee" was created for the purpose of protecting the reputation of the industry in every possible manner. The fake promotion schemes will be the especially target of this committee in an effort to protect the public. Information will be collected on companies selling stock for new production companies and an effort made to put an end to the exploitation of the business by unscrupulous adventurers who advertise the "fabulous" profits and certain success of wild-cat companies. It was shown by Mr. Quirk that millions of dollars have been taken from the gullible public with no chance of return.

A committee was also appointed to consider the advisability of participating in the wold's fair at Buenos Ayres next year. The association was advised that Watterson A. Rothacker has already been appointed the official cinemtographer of the event, and was asked to send an exhibit.

Hardly an echo of the exhiibtors' controversies was heard at the association meeting, and the only semblance of an argument arose over the personnel of the fifth division of the board of directors.

The election of officers was postponed until September, when it will be possible for a larger attendance of the board of directors.

One action of the association, the significance and necessity for which was pointed out by President Brady in his annual address, was the creation of a committee on foreign relations for the purpose of establishing contact with similar bodies in other countries.

The reports of Executive Secretary Elliott and of the standing committees were of great interest in that they showed the efforts made by the associaion during the year and the achievement of much progress.

Especially interesting was the report of John Connelly, Washington representative of the association. He described the efforts of the association toward the passage of the amendment to the penal code which places motion pictures in the same class as newspapers, books and magazines regarding the penalties inflicted by the interstate commerce in immoral of obscene matter.

"Keep politics off the screen," declared William A. Brady, the retiring president. "There are many persons who realize the power of the screen, who will be trying to use it for political purposes," he continued, "but it should be made emphatic that the screen of this country is not in politics. Neither should a man be asked to pay his money to go to the theater and then be forced to sit takes this opportunity to gratefully acknowledge the many telegrams and other communications from the exhibitors of the United States and Canada and the motion picture trade in general, following our announcement that will appear in the special productions adapted for masterful stories, to be released during the years 1921 and 1922.

MISS LILLIAN GISH

Mr. William L. Sherill extends an invitation to all exhibitors attending the convention at Cleveland to call upon him and and Mr. Jesse J. Goldburg, General Manager, at the Hotel Winton, June 9th, 10th, and 11th to confer with respect to the plan of franchise distribution of booking of The Lillian Gish Productions.

NOTE: After June 11th, address all communications to the Company Offices, Times Building, New York.

One Group Will Sell You Out As Quickly As The Other

Let's talk some English without chewing the words. What are any of the various producer and distributor crowds giving you when they sell you a franchise?

In addition to paying for hollow, valueless franchises you also pay for the pictures they cover—many of them pictures you wouldn't buy unless the franchise forced you to do so.

Associated Producers, Inc., isn't franchising or sub-franchising anything or anyone.

Seven powerful producers—and there will be others—have burned all the bridges that linked them to other organizations and banded irrevocably together for a long term of years. Their productions will enable any exhibitor who wishes to be free and independent to hold his theatre and escape any organization's franchise yoke.

With our first release September 12th we guarantee a minimum of thirty of the most powerful productions the industry has ever known.

You do not have to be owned, controlled or throttled by us to get our productions. We have always believed and still believe that powerful pictures, independently and cleanly sold, guarantee the success and independence of any theatre.

The chief value of a franchise is that it makes you "human collateral" for the organization that sells you the franchise and that once securely franchised you can be—have been—and will be sold out by selfish individuals who measure you only from your dollar values to themselves.

SHOW DISBANDS

Accessory People Who Took Space Have Their Troubles

After it was announced that there would be a big crowd here some bright minds conceived that it would be a good thing to hold an accessory show at the Grays Armory. Soon a lot of trade paper advertising appeared inviting the accessory people to take space and also suggesting that pictures should be shown for independent producers.

It is understood that quite a number of accessory people wired for space reservations and a number in New York and other points went to considerable expense preparing for the show as well as paying express charges to get their exhibits here in time.

But for some reason the show failed to materialize, and those who had engaged space found themselves up against it. Many of them hving gone to considerable expense to get here immediately made plans to have their exhibits shown from other quarters.

Among those was the Monsoon Cooling System of New York. "Monsoon" Dailey was in charge of the exhibit. He got a regular New York hustle on and after a lot of trouble arranged his exhibit in the quarters of the Oliver M. P. Supply Co., 737 ?????? Ave. where he is holding out. He'll tell you a lot about the Monsoon system. He bubbles over with it.

Some "Famous" People

Among the Famous Players party here are Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the corporation; "Al" Lichtman, in charge of sales; Sidney L. Kent, sales manager; H. H. Buxbaum, New York exchange manager; Claude Saunders, exploitation manager; Jerome Beatty, publicity director; Gordon Place, Charles E. MacCarthy, publicity department; W. E. Smith, Philadelphia district manager, M. E. Lewis, district manager, and Joseph Gilday, Kansas City exchange manager.

Toronto, Can.—Colonial reopened after being rebuilt.

Will Pray for Harmony

A prominent Indiana exhibitor who controls 21 theaters in the Hoosier state, stated in a conversation with Harry Berman of Universal, that he was going to pray last evening that peace and quiet would reign supreme at the convention. He stated that if there was any bolting he would never attend another convention.

Exchanges Changes

Chicago—Phil Dumas has been appointed manager of the local Hodkinson office.

Chicago—Steve Montgomery, formerly manager of the Famous Players' Toronto exchange, and Frank Williams have been made salesman and booker respectively for Robertson-Cole.

New York—A. G. Stockhammer, former exhibitor, is now a member of the Select sales force.

Toronto, Can.—The local Universal office is now located at 305 Yonge Street.

Battle Starts

"Let's forget our petty jealousies and really get together," Cohen urged.

"The producer-exhibitor has played upon our petty jealousies too long and taken advantage of us by so doing."

Cohen didn't mince words.

"You all know the menace of Wall Street to our organization," he said. "We must build up a strong organization.

"It's time to realize our own strength.

"We're strong in numbers now. But numbers are only like a rope of sand.

"Strength lies in organization."

Cohen said that the New York exhibitors for whom he could speak, were ready to stand together with the exhibitors of other states in a firm organization.

Frequent applause interrupted his remarks.

He closed with the remark that he hoped every minute of the convention until its very close would be given over to real constructive work.

Floyd Waite, Cleveland director of parks, welcomed the convention to Cleveland. White spoke for Mayor Fitzgerald who was unable to attend.

Glenn Harper, of New York, then replied to Waite's speech.

The detailed report of yesterday's proceedings follow:

At the close of Harper's speech Goldburg arose and started the first real fun when he demanded that Sydney Cohen be displaced as chairman in view of the fact that he headed the New York faction. He tried to nominate Louis Blumenthal, of New Jersey, as chairman. This did not "go down" and the motion was overruled. S. I. Berman moved that the temporary meeting adjourn, which was seconded and passed.

It was announced that the committee on registration and arrangements would be used as a credentials committee to pass upon the eligibility of theater owners and managers seeking admission. This committee met immediately after the adjournment. At the conclusion of the meeting there were many cheers for Cohen.

In a heated discussion after the morning meeting Goldburg insisted that inasmuch as the meeting had ruled that exhibitors who were affiliated with any producing company could not attend that this eliminated all First National franchise holders. Officers held that this statement was not true. It was the center of lengthy argument after the meeting had adjourned.

The afternoon session opened at 4 o'clock, H. H. Lustig of Cleveland, was elected permanent chairman of the convention. W. C. Patterson, of Atlanta, was elected recording secretary, and Sam Berman, of New York, was elected recording secretary. After a short speech by Lustig the report of the committee of 17 was ordered read by Frank Rembusch, chairman of this committee. The report had to do with various recommendations suggested by this committee after months of work and required a long time to read.

During the reading of the report several interruptions were made by T. D. Goldburg, of Baltimore, who insisted that the meeting was not interested in the report as it stood. He was hooted down for the third time the same day and answered by a representative from California who said: "Gentlemen, we have come three thousand miles to attend this convention, we are very much interested in this report and demand that the proper time be given for its reading. I think the objection of Mr. Goldburg is preposterous." After much hooting and calling at Goldburg, Rembusch proceeded.

There was an outburst of applause when Rembusch suggested the strongest union possible and enthusiasm had reached fever heat. He then announced that the resolution advocated that an executive committee be done away with. This was greeted by cheers. He spoke of financing the proposition and said that a fund of at least $100,000 must be raised to start with (more cheering).

After the preliminary suggestions had been made, Rembusch told the meeting what the various producers had said when called upon by his committee as to their attitude on distributor owned theaters. He first mentioned Vitagraph.

Vitagraph officials told Rembusch that in 1914 they had leased the Criterion theater, New York, after much protest from exhibitors. They held the house for a short time and discontinued its operation under their management in response to protest from exhibitors. They stated that if it was unfair for a producer to operate theaters in 1914 it was unfair now and that Vitagraph would always be independent, would give financial and moral support to the newly formed league and would stay out of the exhibiting field. Loud cheering followed this announcement.

Pathe came next. They were reported as heartily endorsing the "Patterson movement." They also spoke for Hodkinson, Associated Exhibitors and American. Pathe said they had no desire to enter the exhibiting field and would offer financial support to the cause. (Applause and cheering for several minutes.)

Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cochrane of Universal promised hearty support to the committee when they visited Universal. Laemmle stated that Universal now operated eight theatres in towns where it was impossible for them to play their attractions and that they were ready to dispose of these at any time. Laemmle promised the financial and moral support of the Universal.

Hiram Abrams of United Artists told the committee that he was in support of the Patterson movement. He said he thought that the exhibitor should not sign long term contracts with any company and should hold their screens open for the big specials that are produced. He said that each production should be booked on an independent basis by the exhibitor. Abrams offered the financial support of United Artists. In closing Abrams told Rembusch that the exhibitors would never get together at Cleveland. The mention of this frank statement by Abrams brought rounds of laughter from the "old timers."

Lewis J. Selznick told Rembusch he would like to see the exhibitors dominate the motion picture industry and that he would do everything in his power to help them stay independent. Selznick said he would furnish all the films exhibitors needed to do this and that he would also give financial support for the organization.

Officials at Robertson-Cole were heartily in favor of the Patterson movement and offered to give every help. They said that the firm who made good pictures should do busi-and his associates finally winding up by his self appointed (not from the floor of the convention and with no New England member) credential committee, Mr. Chas. Reilly, chairman, challenging my right as an independent exhibitor to take part in the convention.

"For the sake of harmony at the present time, I was willing to have our organization placed in some embarrassment but am unwilling to be placed under possible humiliation by a self-appointed credential committee to be used as they see fit.

"The so-called 'Cleveland Plan' of Screen Advertising was passed (many present probably not understanding the plan) by accepting the report of the committee.

"This is the plan that has been so strenuously opposed through the Trade papers by our organization during the past several months, one that is possible for large profits for those on the inside furnishing the advertising film and one that the film is censored only by a self appointed committee and incurring the greatest danger possible to the success of any big exhibitor organization that has the best interests of its members at heart and not for ulterior purposes by its officers.

ness. They also said that they thought the exhibitor should stay away from the producing end of the game. This remark brought applause from the convention. They do not own any theaters and do not intend to.

J. D. Williams, of First National, told Rembusch that he was in favor of the Patterson movement from its inception. He would like to see a strong body formed to enforce rules that would protect the industry. He stated that although First National had made many mistakes they were going out on a broader plan in the future. Williams was pronounced in offering financial support to any organization that would be framed as an outcome of the convention.

When it was announced that Rembusch, with his committee, had visited Marcus Loew a deep lull covered the entire house. He said Marcus Loew frankly stated that he hoped the strongest organization imaginable would be formed at Cleveland for the mutual benefit of independent exhibitors. Loew said he bought into Metro because he wanted to be sure of films for his theaters. He also told the committee that he had advanced loans to a small film producing company for the reason that he did not want to see them forced out of business. He said that the exhibitor must help the small producer to stay in business and support them. Rembusch told Loew that exhibitors had protested against the name of Loew appearing on Metro pictures on the gorund that it advertised a competitor and Loew told him he would immediately have the name Loew removed from all Metro films.

Goldwyn told the committee that they would promise not to enlarge their present holdings but they would reserve the right to build theaters in towns where they did not have representation.

William Fox was out of town when the committee called to see him. Several wires and letters were sent to Mr. Fox, but he did not reply to any of them. Rembusch said he did not know what Fox's attitude would be on the question. Circulars were distributed in the convention by the Fox people but nothing was said about Fox buying more theaters.

Great interest was expressed when it was announced that the committee had called upon Adolph Zukor of Famous Players. Rembusch told them that Zukor was out of town when he called and that a statement was not availble.

The report of the committee of 17 was ordered tabled until tomorrow morning at which time it was agreed to dissect it piece by piece for final approval.

The meeting was adjourned at six-fifteen and it was decided to begin Wednesday morning's session at ten o'clock and continue until 12. The afternoon sessions were to be from 1:30 until 5 o'clock.

It was agreed that each exhibitor should have one vote and that the majority should rule.

Rembusch suggested that the permanent organization consist of one delegate from each congressional district in each state and that the state delegations elect one director to the national body which would give a working organization of forty-eight. He further recommended that the presidency be held by a man such as former President Taft.

TO MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS IN SESSION IN CLEVELAND

Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Liberty. Individual exhibitors will escape schemes of national operation of theatres only by encouraging their friends the independent producers of good quality pictures. The way lies open through that distributor who is not a producer and is not a rival exhibitor. This distributor selects pictures from the open market on a basis of merit and quality. He does not handle producers' mistakes. He cannot afford to. Can you?

Mack Sennett Announces Extensive Plans

Mack Sennett's policies, as outlined by his personal representative, E. M. Asher, who has just returned to the East and is now attending the convention, contemplate a year of extraordinary activity.

Ninety days following the release of "Married Life," June 15, will see the beginning of the distribution of the second five-reel comedy, for which First National has contracted, says Asher. This will bring Mr. Sennett's activities up to the time of the beginning of operations by the Associated Producers which thereafter will distribute Sennett Comedies.

These activities of Mr. Sennett will include the production of two-reel feature farces, five-reel comedies, and five-reel comedy dramas.

Kendall with Chambers

New York—Messmore Kendall of the Capitol Theatre yesterday officially announced his affiliation with Robert W. Chambers to produce the Chambers stories. This indicates a closer affiliation between Isaac Wolper and Kendall who recently incorporated the C. Gardner Sullivan Vivian Martin, another Kendall star, will soon start her second production. Lane in Cleveland

Former Government Official Left Last Night—Working on Americanization Idea

Former Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane left for Cleveland last night where he will meet informally a delegation of exhibitors now assembled in convention.

Mr. Lane, who is chairman of the Americanism Committee, went to Cleveland solely for the purpose of interesting the exhibitors in the Americanization movement and in enlisting their full cooperation. He was invited to attend the conventions by William A. Brady at the last meeting of the Americanization Committee here in New York.

Mr. Lane will not make any public speeches since his position is such that he can deliver no formal addresses for 60 days. He will, however, meet a delegation of exhibitors in an informal way.

In view of the fact that Frank Rembusch, as part of his plan for one general exhibitor organization, has suggested Mr. Lane as a possible leader for such an organization, inquiries were made last night as to whether Mr. Lane's Cleveland visit had any bearing on that plan. It was learned, however, that Mr. Lane's other duties would make acceptance as active head of a body of that sort impossible.

With Mr. Lane went W. A. Ryan, executive secretary of the committee.

Wm. A. Brady Refuses to Head National Association Again—42 Directors Named

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland—The National Association met yesterday and failed to elect a president. William A. Brady declined to run for that office again. The election of president will be held in September.

The directors for the various divisions were elected as nominated at the association meeting held in New York before the convention. The only additions are Percy L. Waters and J. D. Williams in the distributors' division. The complete list follows:

Cohen Opens Session

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland, O.—The biggest exhibitor convention ever held in the industry opened yesterday.

Sydney Cohen opened the meeting of the M. P. Theater Owners at the Winton yesterday. Cohen in his address said:

"The biggest problems we have to face are those of the producer-exhibitor and Wall Street."

Floyd Waite, an official of the city government, welcomed the exhibitors in the name of the Mayor.

Tommy Grey of Baltimore attempted to have an unbiased chairman elected so as to insure harmony at the convention, but his attempt failed.

The program planned for the exhibitors included a boat ride on the steamer Roosevelt last night and an auto ride for the ladies today. Tonight there will be a theater party and tomorrow a baseball game.

The weather here is wonderful. To add to the gayety of things various companies have arranged for private showings. The following pictures will be shown: "The Return of Tarzan," "Suds," "The Mollycoddle," "Married Life," and some short reels distributed by educational.

Vivian Rich, Featured Player

Vivian Rich, who was announced recently as a Fox star, will finish her contract, it is understood, as a featured player in Fox productions. Miss Rich made two pictures as a star for Fox, one "Would You Forgive?" having been released and the other "A World of Folly" now awaiting release.

Will Rogers is in a fair way to rival the adored William S. Hart, I'm thinking. Like Hart, he is an incoherent wooer, a shy and shambling greatheart of the open country. His tongue is in his cheek oftener, though, and his eye is more roguish. He is given to the sly wink rather than the downcast glance with which the other actor is wont to adorn his playing. William S. is the Great Dane, so to speak, of pictures, and Rogers the no less pathetic but much more mischievous Scotch terrier (if both of them will forgive the doggy metaphor).

"Jes' Call Me Jim" is a good story, narrated cleverly and with commendable dispatch. It might have been written for the star, so easily does he fit into the role of honest woodsman who befriends an injured comrade and outwits the plotters of the piece.

A gauche and wordless suitor, in the end he finds happiness with Keziah Butterworth, whom he's been courting in John Alden fashion for some time. Irene Rich, as the adored one, is pretty and fresh as a clove pink, and wholesome as a breeze from some one's old-fashioned garden. You'll like her, I'm sure, just as you'll like that cunning wee tad, Jimmy Rogers, who stumbles stubbily through the picture.

"Jes' Call Me Jim," I'm trying to tell you, is worth while. Don't s'pose all of you will agree with me, but then, as the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina, you can't please all of the people all of the time!

Will Rogers and Son Appear in "Jes' Call Me Jim"

WILL ROGERS of lariat throwing fame appears on the Strand screen this week in an amusing and well-made film titled "Jes Call Me Jim." His own smal son, a cunning lad who answe to the name of Jim, tramp sturdily through the story.

ROGERS MAKES HIT IN NEWEST FILM

' Call Me Jim" Is Excellent Combination of Humor and Pathos.

IS FEATURE AT THE STRAND

By AGNES SMITH.

It is Will Rogers in "Jes' Call Me Jim" at the Strand this week. The picture confirms a suspicion that we have had for a long time—that Rogers is our favorite screen actor. At first we thought liked him because it was such a re- to see a homely hero.

Jes' Call Me Jim" is better than bilo" and that means that it is a real ture. It has one scene that is as good as the part in "The Miracle Man" where the crippled boy is healed. The actors are Rogers and his little son, Jimmie. The boy prays for the life of his screen father. While we dislike praying children in motion pictures, this particular scene is so beautifully acted by Rogers and Jimmie and so finely directed by Clarence Badger that it misses any touch of sentimentality. Don't take our word for it, but go to the Strand and watch the girl ushers cry over it. And from the way the audience behaved, it would seem that Rogers is going to be a regular David Warfield.

However, there is a lot of humor in "Jes' Call Me Jim," And it has a good story. Rogers's romance with the village milliner is amusingly told. He spends his money on feminine hats, although he is a lone bachelor with no one to give them to. The subtitles, too, contain plenty of shrewd humor.

The combination of an engrossing story and Rogers's kindly sincerity makes "Jes' Call Me Jim" an ideal picture for those who are a little tired of artificiality, pretentiousness and bunk. Next to the star and his son, the best acting is done by Raymond Hatton. The picture is released by Goldwyn.

Will Rogers at the Strand and "The Sea Wolf" at the Rialto

There is fun enough for three motion picture productions in the Will Rogers film called "Jes' Call Me Jim," at the Strand Theater this week. It shows Mr. Rogers in the rôle of Jim Fenton, a happy-go-lucky hunter and trapper, who is in love with the village milliner, played by Irene Rich. A friend of Jim, Paul Benedict, is placed in an insane asylum through a conspiracy perpetrated by influential citizens, who seek to obtain the right to Benedict's invention. Jim hears of his friend's predicament through the milliner, who has taken charge of Paul's son, Harry, portrayed by Mr. Rogers's young son. Jim, confronted by many difficulties, obtains the release of his friend and eventually wins the pretty milliner, but not until the star has found means through which to speak no fewer than a score of his own brand of remarks on things in general, each with an O. Henry "punch" that brings roars from the audience.

Mr. Rogers no doubt will do much more in pictures. His rugged face and his ability to express himself by facial twists make him a good camera subject. These facts, combined with his own inimitable philosophy and witticisms, go to make of him one of the few real humorists of the screen today.

Hodkinson Bulletin

To Motion Picture Exhibitors

in Session at Cleveland

Eternal Vigilance is the Price of Liberty. Individual exhibitors will escape schemes of national operation of theatres only by encouraging their friends—the independent producers of good quality pictures. The way lies open through that distributor who is not a producer and is not a rival exhibitor. This distributor selects pictures from the open market on a basis of merit and quality. He does not handle producers' mistakes. He cannot afford to. Can you?

Select your pictures through the independent distributor so organized to select only those pictures that promote the welfare and prestige of motion pictures.

Greetings from a Former Exhibitor.

The Pioneer is prepared to protect the complete independence of the exhibitor, producer and distributor.

The Pioneer is not the exhibitor's competitor—all it wants is the privilege of serving the exhibitor and independent producer.

Alice Brady to Continue on Stage

Alice Brady will not devote all of her future time to pictures, it seems, but will take a month's vacation after her show closes in Chicago and will then make one picture for Realart. After that her fall theatrical season starts again.

The fact that Miss Brady would abandon the stage for the screen was authorized by Realart.

Exploitation Dept. for Fox

Among the plans for Fox expansion is the development of an exploitation department with a representative at every exchange.

Normand Finishes New Film

Mabel Normand has finished "The Slim Princess" for Goldwyn. This is Miss Normand's last production for the current season and is the third she has made during the past year. The others are "Jinx" and "Pinto."

One Group Will Sell You Out As Quickly As The Other

Let's talk some English without chewing the words. What are any of the various producer and distributor crowds giving you when they sell you a franchise?

In addition to paying for hollow, valueless franchises you also pay for the pictures they cover—many of them pictures you wouldn't buy unless the franchise forced you to do so.

Associated Producers, Inc., isn't franchising or sub-franchising anything or anyone.

Seven powerful producers—and there will be others—have burned all the bridges that linked them to other organizations and banded irrevocably together for a long term of years. Their productions will enable any exhibitor who wishes to be free and independent to hold his theatre and escape any organization's franchise yoke.

With our first release September 12th we guarantee a minimum of thirty of the most powerful productions the industry has ever known.

You do not have to be owned, controlled or throttled by us to get our productions. We have always believed and still believe that powerful pictures, independently and cleanly sold, guarantee the success and independence of any theatre.

The chief value of a franchise is that it makes you "human collateral" for the organization that sells you the franchise and that once securely franchised you can be—have been—and will be sold out by selfish individuals who measure you only from your dollar values to themselves.

NEARING THE END

Election of Officers and Final Committee Reports Today Expected To Close Convention---Loew and Lane Talk

The stage is pretty well set for a quick finish to the exhibitors convention. After the election of officers, and the adoption today of various reports in all likelihood the end will be in sight. That is, unless something unusual develops.

Yesterday Marcus Loew really proved the feature.

His address, touching as it did on many points, proved a big special. Former Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane also spoke, and State Senator Walker of New York put in some strong licks for Sydney Cohen and Berman and O'Reilly, telling what they had accomplished in the New York State legislature. There is some talk of Walker being named President of the national body.

Throughout both morning and afternon sessions there was little excitement. A mass of resolutions were offered.

The report of the convention, in detail:

The morning session opened at 11:15, R. S. Coleand A. F. Kinzeler made seargent of arms. Committees appointed were:

Nomination: A. M. Jackson, San Francisco, chairman; C. W. Gates, South Dakota; C. L. O'Reilly, New York; E. T. Peters, Dallas; Ralph Talbot, Tulsa; C. C. Griffin, San Francisco; Fred Herrington, Pennsylvania; John Mannheimer, New York.

Laws and Legislation: John Manheimer, New York, chairman; H. H. Lustig, Cleveland; Maurice Choynski, Chicago; H. Webster Smith, Baltimore; T. L. Hays, Minneapolis; A. J. Klast, Pontiac; C. H. Goodwin, Philadelphia; Frank Rembusch, Indiana.

Ways and Means: E. T. Peters, Dallas, chairman; Sydney Cohen, New York; M. Van Praag, Kansas City; Sam Bullock, Cleveland; J. T. Collins, Rutherford; W. Al. Steffes,

Zukor Statement

ays Famous Was Compelled to Enter Exhibiting Field—Wants Harmony

Adolph Zukor, of Famous, issued he following statement yesterday:

"Famous Players-Lasky Corporaion had no idea of entering the exibiting field two years ago when group of exhibitors decided to go nto the producing and distributing ield and made offers to every star nd every director employed by Faous-Lasky Corporation.

"The main argument these exhiitors had to offer our people was hat these exhibitors, through their wnership of theaters, could offer hese stars and directors better disribution of their product than could e had through a company that was n no way engaged in the exhibiting nd of the business.

"In self-defense we were forced to ake steps to provide an outlet for ur pictures in every section where he proper presentation of our prodct was threatened by activities of xhibitors who were producing and istributing their own pictures.

"We were faced with a situation in vhich we were not able to obtain roper representation in many imortant communities without becomng interested in theaters—a situaion forced upon Famous Players-asky Corporation by exhibitors who re distributing their own product. Ve had no desire to enter the exhibitng business. We have no desire to xtend our theater interests.

"Famous Players-Lasky Corporaion will be very glad at all times to onfer with a committee representng all exhibitors—including exhiitors who are producing and disributing pictures—for the purpose f bringing about harmony and unerstanding in all branches of our ndustry for the mutual benefit f all."

Hiram Abrams was elected president of United Artists at a meeting Wednesday. Those present, "Doug," "Mary," Griffith, Denis F. O'Brien, Mrs. Pickford, Albert Banhaf, and Nathan Burkan. Mary presided. O'Brien was re-elected vice president and Banzhaf secretary.

REASONING

When Frank Rembusch was talking to Adolph Zukor the latter informed Rembusch, so he says, that exhibitors who had ideas of going into producing—as evidenced by the screen advertising contract—should not criticise producers from becoming exhibitors.

METRO PLANS

Discussing the plans Metro has for the coming season, General Manager W. C. Atkinson said yesterday: "We will have 50 big productions, the work of the best authors and dramatists. Nazimova, in four big productions, head the list. "The Four Horsemen" will also be a very fine feature. Work on this has been begun. And the list of productions will reach a splendid standard.

"As to policy: Metro will allow the exhibitor to either rent on a flat rental basis or if percentage is desired this will be arranged as well."

Incidentally, Mr. Atkinson said production costs had trebled during the past year.

LOEW HOSPITALITY

Marcus Loew has informed all exhibitors attending the convention that upon presentation of their card they will be cheerfully welcome at any of his local houses.

Rules and Resolutions: C. W. Gates, South Dakota, chairman; Jules Michaels, Buffalo; Glenn Harper, Los Angeles; H. H. Green, Minneapolis; Judge G. H. Foster, Marion, Ohio; A. L. Puker, Ironwood, Mich.; J. M. Reider, New Jersey; H. H. Linten, New York.

J. Smith, of the Whitehurst interests in Baltimore, started some fun with a statement that the chairman should not appoint committees, that they should be appointed by the body. Lustig, chairman, said he consulted the convention before appointing committees but resigned the chair so that a vote of confidence could be placed for him. Vote was taken amidst cheers imposing confidence in appointment of these committees.

O'Rielly, of New York, answered objection of Smith and said that committee on arrangements was national in scope and that no steam roller methods were being used. Cheers from convention. O'Rielly said that two-thirds of the committee had never met and they did not know each other before they came to Cleveland.

An attempt was then made to admit Marcus Loew to the convention. Goldburg of Baltimore said this was not order of business. Objections of Goldburg were hissed and hooted and for the fourth time he was asked to sit down and close up. It was decided that the first part of the report of the Committee of 17 be referred to the Committe on Business Relations. Carried without a dissenting vote, thus giving more time for consideration of other business. The second part of the report of the Committee of 17 was referred to the Committee on Organization. This was carried without a dissenting vote, admidst loud cheers.

Earnest Horstmann, of Massachusetts, moved that the convention send a telegram to Gov. Coolidge of Massachusetts thanking him for vetoing the censorship bill. Carried amidst cheers.

About this time, it was 12:30, and someone moved to adjourn. Cries of "Throw him out;" "Mob him," and "Get a doctor" raised from all parts of the floor. They meant business and did not want to adjourn.

A committee was appointed to meet Franklin K. Lane, ex-Secretary of the Interior, to address the convention at the afternoon session. O'Reilly, New York, chairman, W. C. Patterson and H. H. Griffin appointed. To meet Senator Walker of New York, also to adress meeting, of New York, also to address meeting, were Peters, Ritter and Trigger.

Charles O'Rielly caused a roar when he took the floor and asked that Marcus Loew be admitted to the convention without any active vote. Required about 15 minutes of discussion, heated arguments, and required three votes before it was decided to admit Loew. Alfred S. Black was also admitted. Committee appointed to wait on Loew and ask him to attend convention with full power to vote. Was also decided to admit both Sabloskey and McGuirk of Pennsylvania, although they were connected with the Stanley company. Charles O'Rielly in a loudly applauded speech said he favored the admittance of Loew, Black, Sabloskey, McGuirk and all others under ban so that it could be said no steam roller was used. Loud cheering and applause.

then addressed the convention. Big reception and applause. Herrington said that both Loew and Zukor knew the independent crowd had them on the run and were willing to give anything to help.

It required debate of 15 minutes to adjourn.

Lee Ochs had a talk with Alfred S. Black yesterday morning in which he suggested that if he (Black) would take up with the Committee on Arrangements the question of where he stands with regard to the so-called affiliation with Zukor that it might be fixed so that he could attend the convention. But Black told Ochs that inasmuch as he had been barred out without reason, or even any desire for any explanation, that he had not the slightest idea of taking anything up with any committee. And the emphatic language he used closed the conversation abruptly.

It developed yesterday that Charley Olson, of Indianapolis, was also barred as a delegate on the grounds that he held a franchise in Associated Exhibitors. Olson demanded back the $5 registration fee taken from him.

The afternoon session was not quite as stormy. It looked as though the exhibitors assembled wanted to put on a well kept front to the speakers of the afternoon and there was more order during the entrance of ex-Secretary Franklin H. Lane than has ever been seen in the hall. Lane seemed to command attention and was met with loud applause as he entered the room. Lane's subject was "Americanization." He said that he had been dealing with the motion picture industry for the last seven months but that he had been told that this was the largest meeting of the film industry that had ever been held. He said that he was glad to see that for the first time the exhibitors of the country had come to realize their own dignity and value. Lane received volumes of applause when he told the exhibitors assembled that foreigners never would learn the story of true Americanism by any other means than educational. He said it was impossible to force the doctrines of Americanism down anyone's throat unless care and kindness were the main methods used.

He admonished the convention to keep away from petty politics and stand above childish jealousies. He told them that with a union they were the most dominant force in the industry and that without one they were the most feeble. He stated that the public nowadays does not listen to the public or gather at the red school house for their views of the world, but that a majority of them went to the picture theater for their education along these lines. Lane said that the most important thing that must be impressed upon the minds of the general public was the fact that absolutely nothing could be done without good hard work. He begged them to preach this doctrine to the world with the remark that they could do it better than anyone else at the present not barring the newspapers. This statement was greeted with loud cheers and applause. He then asked if the exhibitors would help him. Loud cries of "Yes, Yes," was the answer.

After three or four minutes of cheering for Lane, Chairman Lustig introduced "the youngest state senator in the world" and one who was powerfully popular because he always championed the cause of the "underdog." Lustig said that State Senator James A. Walker, who was to address the convention was the best friend the New York State Exhibitors' League had and also the motion picture industry in general. He helped kill the New York "Blue Laws" which prevented the public from even smiling on Sunday. He also was responsible for putting the anti-deposit bill on the statute books of New York state.

In his opening remarks Walker (a very youthful appearing man) stated that he had not come to address this convention because he wanted money—he added that he had too much sense for that (laughter and applause). Walker is the minority leader in the New York legislature and he told his auditors that the business of the minority in the legislature is to harrass the majority and otherwise filibuster and block legislation that they do not deem advisable. He said that he did want to see a convention without some good fights but he closed by saying that after the fighting the majority should rule and the minority should submit to the will of the multitude. He said the slogan "one for all and all for one" was an excellent one to adopt for this meeting. (Loud cheering and applause stopped his speech here for several minutes.) Walker classed motion picture theaters as public service corporations in that they have a definite purpose to function in public life.

Walker told how Sydney Cohen, Sam Berman and Charles O'Rielly had won the censorship, anti-deposit and Sunday opening fights. He said that he would give Sydney Cohen and his associates anything that they wanted from the New York legislature now and for all time. He cautioned the convention not to forget the small exhibitor in their deliberations, for without them they could not exist. (Cheers and applause for Walker.)

Joe Hopp, of Chicago, thanked Senator Walker for his inspiring speech.

Soyer, of Cleveland, urged the exhibitors not to forget the words of Walker and Lane.

"Tim" Kearse, of Charleston, W. Va., in a most enthusiastic speech, suggested that the national body follow the example set by the New York State League. This was met with loud applause. The telegram to be sent to Governor Coolidge of Massachusetts as suggested by Ernest Horstmann was read next.

It was resolved that the name of the organization should be Motion Picture Theater Owners of America.

When a resolution was offered endorsing the trade papers Leo Becker, of New York, took the platform and asked that this be held up inasmuch as Wid's Daily had published an article which was written by Alfred S. Black and which was not correct. Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va., shouted that the convention had no time to listen to this statement and that the convention was not interested in this matter. A committee was appointed to investigate the matter.

At this point Marcus Loew took the floor in order that he might explain his attitude toward the convention. Mr. Loew said that from the time he had entered business he had been interested in the independent producer. He said that he had not entered the producing field for selfish motives. He explained that he actually feared for his future and had taken the step for his own protection. Loew said from the time he started in business he had always favored the small independent pro-

David Barrist, one of the 25 delegates from Philadelphia, announced he was self-appointed publicity man for the delegation.

"I did newspaper work before entering the movie game," he says. "And I can still wield a wicked pen when the occasion arises."

Do film men ever agree on what film did the best business? Well it's questionable.

But here are two that do.

Both David Morris and A. E. Brown, of Philadelphia, say it was "Wives of Men."

They say that was their best money-maker last year.

Val Raysburg, Dayton exhibitor, says he doesn't care to be located in a town any bigger than Dayton.

"I know most of my patrons by name," he says. "And I like that personal element.

"If I was in New York or Chicago it would be lost."

Dan Barton, inventor of the Bartola organ, is at the convention.

Barton played in a movie orchestra 17 years.

"That was so I could find out just what the perfect movie organ should be like," he says.

"I've been interested in national affairs of exhibitors ten years," H. H. Lustig, of Cleveland, permanent Sydney Cohen was called the Senator Lodge of the Convention.

That's because like Lodge at Chicago, his was the honor of delivering the convention's keynote speech.

Jimmy Boyse from Arkansas was handing out trick cards, decorated with rebuses.

"I guess I'm the only man here from Arkansas," he said. "I've got to make a noise for the state somehow."

Joseph Grossman, Cleveland exhibitor at the convention, has recently returned from a tour of the Orient.

S. I. Berman, executive secretary of the Motion Pictures League of New York, lit a cigar in the Winton lobby, looked around and then said: "There are more cigars being smoked at this convention than any I ever attended."

E. J. Cole owns the only picture house in Rochester, Mich.

"But I have some competition just the same," he says. "Detroit is only a half hour ride from Rochester."

J. T. Collins, president of the New Jersey Exhibitors League, helped organize that association.

"Are independent exhibitors anxious to protect their rights?" says Collins. "You should have seen how quickly they joined our association."

"Al" Kinzeler, "Doc" Alexander, Bert Fiala, George Oxrider, Ben Wheeler and Pete Zender were among the delegates from the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League from Dayton, Ohio.

1st NAT'L LUNCHEON

Through arrangement by First National Exhibitors Circuit of Ohio and E. M. Asher, personal representative for Mack Sennett, a big luncheon was given at the Statler yesterday, at which over 500 exhibitors were present.

The feature of the affair was the screening of "Married Life" (not a war picture), Mack Sennett's latest 5 reel comedy. Following "Married Life," Norma Talmage's "Yes or No" was shown.

A special orchestra was used for each picture, and while the crowd was finishing their coffee and lighting up the smokes, the lights went out and the picture started. Each guest was presented with photos of Ben Turpin and Phyllis Haver. The envelope was covered with many humorous catchlines, one of which was "Before you figure your wife all wrong, be sure you're all right yourself."

Those in charge of arrangements were Lieutenant Jim Anderson, Earl Hudson and Norman Lusk, of First National, E. M. Asher, Maurice Meyers and Charles Muhleman.

Producers who attack Exhibitors and Exhibitor Organizations have a very deep purpose. It is a different problem for producers who want to keep the whip hand to treat with organized exhibitors than to deal with them singly.

"Stinging them" one by one is an old practice. And they're at it again, trying to revive the idea that exhibitors cannot trust one another.

ducer. Loew told of a call he had from a small producer just before leaving New York City for the Cleveland meeting. The producer asked for a loan and said that his business was in danger. Loew frankly admitted that he went out and borrowed money so that he might sign a check to make a loan to the producer in question. Loew's frankness during the entire speech "caught on" with the crowd. Loew said that even if it were possible for him to control the entire producing business he would not want the opportunity for at that time, according to him, the business would start to decline. He also stated that Wall Street money could never control the motion picture industry. He said that Wall Street was a cold blooded machine and that when the time came when they did not make a healthy profit on the money they had invested they would withdraw immediately. He stated that Metro had cost him $5,000,000 since the 1st of January and that it would cost him another $4,000,000 soon. Loew said that the only fact that made him buy Metro was his actual worry over not being able to get pictures for next season. He talked with one big producer in regard to next season's product and was told that the percentage system would be used. Loew said he would rather close every theater he owns than play straight percentage. He said that he had building operations going on that ran into millions and that this menace forced him to enter the producing field.

Loew frankly told the convention that immediately after the official of the distributing firm had told him of next season's percentage arrangements that he called Richard Rowland on the phone and made a dinner engagement for that day. He entered into a tentative agreement the same day because of the producers attitude, he said. Loew said that the percentage plan was the thing for them to worry about and that before long under this plan they would be nothing more than janitors in their own theaters. He begged every exhibitor present to come to him if they needed help or protection and he would be more than glad to give them his support. (A riot of cheering.) Loew thinks that film companies need deposits from exhibitors when they are in the early stages of operation, but not after that.

Shortly after, adjournment was taken until this morning at 10 o'clock.

Loew an Exhibitor

Defines Stand Regarding Metro—$9,000,000 to Be Spent on Next Year's Output

Metro yesterday made public the text of the address Marcus Loew delivered to the visiting Metro exchange managers at the annual convention held the end of last month.

Loew's statement is of interest in view of the talk in circulation regarding producers-exhibitors. In New York City the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce, which numbers several hundred exhibitors, has openly shown its opposition to the Loew-Metro affiliation and the use of Marcus Loew's name on Metro productions.

At Broadway Theaters

Capitol

S. L. Rothapfel has come back to Broadway and the first program that he arranged for the Capitol theater indicates that he has plenty of innovations up his sleeve even though its general outline reflects the same policy that he first made popular at the Strand.

Instead of the usual overture Rothapfel has used Victor Herbert's "American Fantasie" as o. 1 on his first Capitol program. The large orchestra is assisted by the Capitol chorus which renders "Hail Columbia," "Swanee River," "The Girl I Left Behind Me" and "Over There" as the airs are introduced into the composition.

Before the conclusion the screen is brought down and Prizma pictures of the North Atlantic Battleship Squadron in action are shown to the accompaniment of the rousing, patriotic finale. All this registered a big hit with the audience that jammed the Capitol on its reopening night.

The theater has been rearranged, the most important and praiseworthy feature of the new regime being the shifting of the orchestra to the stage, where it is in full view of the audience and where it seems more an integral part of the entertainment than it did in the old pit.

The third unit on the program was another Prizma number, "Hagopian, the Rug Maker," and No. 4 was the recital and singing by the chorus of four of Lawrence Hope's Indian Love Lyrics. Before picturesque settings by John Wenger, which were enhanced by unusual lighting and draperies, these renditions were undoubtedly the artistic hig,h light of the program. The news reels came next and then followed "Scratch My Back," the Goldwyn feature, that has registered as one of the comedy sensations of the season. The Capitol orchestra rendered another Herbert number, "Mlle. Modiste," and Hy Mayer's Travelaugh, "At the Zoo," concluded.

Strand

Following a week of showings at the Hotel Astor, "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, has moved up the street to the Strand, where, the management says, it is doing an unusual business. The surrounding program is briefer than usual owing to the length of the feature, and there are no specially appropriate numbers rendered. The overture is selections from "Gioconda," the review and a Chester scenic, "Take the Elevator," following in order. Previous to the pictures Carlo Ferretti, baritone, renders a popular air from "Pagliacci." The organ solo is "Festival March."

Rivoli

The Rivoli program this week is made up of seven numbers, neither one of which bears any direct relation to the others. A Tschaikowsky overture is rendered to open the bill. The pictorial with the Republican presidential possibilities holding prominent position follows. An exceedingly pretty duet, "Happy Days," by Anton Strelezki, was sung by Betty Anderson and Helen McGee before an attractive setting. "Below the Surface," featuring Hobart Bosworth, started thrillingly and finished strong too, but the story obviously sagged and lost interest in the middle. Kreisler's "Caprice Viennois," a dance fantasy, was rendered by May Kitchen and Alexander Oumansky, accompanied by the orchestra. This number too was staged before an unusually attractive setting. "Worries and Wobbles," the Vitagraph comedy, failed to show the best in this line. "Festival March" was the organ solo.

Rialto

Dorothy Gish is always able to draw a capacity house at the Rialto and standing room only during Sunday testified to this fact when her latest picture, "Remodelling Her Husband," was shown. The comedy pleased and overcame the more or less glaring absence of story. A special title was run preceding the picture, stating that it was directed by Lillian Gish and also written by a woman. This attracted attention.

The program with which Hugo Reisenfeld has surrounded the feature is varied, each number standing out distinctly from the others. The overture includes numbers from Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" and was roundly aplauded. The revival of German music in all the houses along Broadway has brought fresh interest to the orchestras and their conductors and this presentation of Wagnerian music brought forth considerable praiseworthy attention from the dailies on Monday.

The notable features of the magazine reels this week are pictures of Republican presidential nominees, all of whom are preceded by scenes of Eugene Debs, receiving the Socialistic nomination on the steps of prison. Debs attracted more attention than any of the others.

Martin Brefel and Edoardo Albane rendered the duet from Verdi's "La Forza Del Destine" and received applause. The feature followed. Lake's "In a Bird Store" was rendered by the orchestra immediately afterwards and Ben Turpin in an old comedy, "The Nut Crackers," followed. This failed to live up to expectations. Turpin is popular from the Sennett releases, but his old form doesn't touch his present work and the treatment of the picture was mediocre. "Cortege" was the organ solo.

Here, in part, is Mr. Loew's speech:

"I am an exhibitor first, last and all the time, and because I have become interested in a big producing organization does not mean that I have changed my attitude. When I made the purchase of Metro stock, I had no intention of opposing other independent exhibitors. I have no such intention now. I want to help rather than fight other exhibitors.

"My watchword is co-operation. There's more to be gained by working together every time than in fighting. A motion picture war would be disastrous to the industry. I want exhibitors to co-operate and want to co-operate with them.

"This is my answer to rumors that have been spread—you probably have heard them—by people who want to embarrass me.

"Let me tell you that I am taking absolutely no hand in the producing end of Metro Pictures Corp. I have always been absolutely satisfied with Metro productions and I'm more than satisfied with them now. I take no credit for those productions. I have nothing to do with them. The producing end of Metro is up to the president of the corporation, Richard A. Rowland. And it's going to continue to be up to him. My end of the business is the exhibiting end, and that's the only end for which I assume responsibility. For the productions I have absolute faith in Mr. Rowland's judgment."

Mr. Loew went on to explain, however, that the new capital he had brought to Metro would enable it to keep on expanding in the producing line, and, with the enlargement of the screen output, the general quality would be improved.

"I expect Metro will make about 50 pictures during the coming year, and 50 pictures insure me a constant supply of first-class entertainment. Mr. Rowland estimates the cost of production will be more than $9,000,000. He expects to spend from $125,000 up to $200,000 on each of these new pictures. Then in addition to the producing studios in Hollywood and New York, there's to be the third studio on Long Island, which I figure to cost about $2,000,000. The three studios have to be operating to make all the pictures Mr. Rowland intends to have produced."

By McELLIOTT.

Will Rogers is in a fair way to rival the adored William S. Hart, I'm thinking. Like Hart, he is an incoherent wooer, a shy and shambling greatheart of the open country. His tongue is in his cheek oftener, though, and his eye is more roguish. He is given to the sly wink rather than the downcast glance with which the other actor is wont to adorn his playing. William S. is the Great Dane, so to speak, of pictures, and Rogers the no less pathetic but much more mischievous Scotch terrier (if both of them will forgive the doggy metaphor).

"Jes' Call Me Jim" is a good story, narrated cleverly and with commendable dispatch. It might have been written for the star, so easily does he fit into the role of honest woodsman who befriends an injured comrade and outwits the plotters of the piece.

A gauche and wordless suitor, in the end he finds happiness with Keziah Butterworth, whom he's been courting in John Alden fashion for some time. Irene Rich, as the adored one, is pretty and fresh as a clove pink, and wholesome as a breeze from some one's old-fashioned garden. You'll like her, I'm sure, just as you'll like that cunning wee tad, Jimmy Rogers, who stumbles stubbily through the picture.

"Jes' Call Me Jim," I'm trying to tell you, is worth while. Don't s'pose all of you will agree with me, but then, as the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina, you can't please all of the people all of the time!

Will Rogers and Son Appear in "Jes' Call Me Jim"

WILL ROGERS of lariat throwing fame appears on the Strand screen this week in an amusing and well-made film titled "Jes Call Me Jim." His own smal son, a cunning lad who answe to the name of Jim, tram sturdily through the story.

ROGERS MAKES HIT IN NEWEST FILM

' Call Me Jim" Is Excellent Combination of Humor and Pathos.

IS FEATURE AT THE STRAND

By AGNES SMITH.

It is Will Rogers in "Jes' Call Me Jim" at the Strand this week. The picture confirms a suspicion that we have had for a long time—that Rogers is our favorite screen actor. At first we thought I liked him because it was such a re- to see a homely hero.

'Jes' Call Me Jim" is better than ibilo" and that means that it is a real ture. It has one scene that is as ood as the part in "The Miracle Man" here the crippled boy is healed. The ctors are Rogers and his little son, Jimmie. The boy prays for the life of his screen father. While we dislike praying children in motion pictures, this particular scene is so beautifully acted by Rogers and Jimmie and so finely directed by Clarence Badger that it misses any ouch of sentimentality. Don't take our word for it, but go to the Strand and watch the girl ushers cry over it. And from the way the audience behaved, it would seem that Rogers is going to be a regular David Warfield.

However, there is a lot of humor in "Jes' Call Me Jim." And it has a good story. Rogers's romance with the village milliner is amusingly told. He spends his money on feminine hats, although he is a lone bachelor with no one to give them to. The subtitles, too, contain plenty of shrewd humor.

The combination of an engrossing story nd Rogers's kindly sincerity makes "Jes' Call Me Jim" an ideal picture for those who are a little tired of artificiality, pretentiousness and bunk. Next to the star and his son, the best acting is done by Raymond Hatton. The picture is released by Goldwyn.

Will Rogers at the Strand and "The Sea Wolf" at the Rialto

There is fun enough for three motion picture productions in the Will Rogers film called "Jes' Call Me Jim," at the Strand Theater this week. It shows Mr. Rogers in the rôle of Jim Fenton, a happy-go-lucky hunter and trapper, who is in love with the village milliner, played by Irene Rich. A friend of Jim, Paul Benedict, is placed in an insane asylum through a conspiracy perpetrated by influential citizens, who seek to obtain the right to Benedict's invention. Jim hears of his friend's predicament through the milliner, who has taken charge of Paul's son, Harry, portrayed by Mr. Rogers's young son. Jim, confronted by many difficulties, obtains the release of his friend and eventually wins the pretty milliner, but not until the star has found means through which to speak no fewer than a score of his own brand of remarks on things in general, each with an O. Henry "punch" that brings tears from the audience.

Mr. Rogers no doubt will do much more in pictures. His rugged face and his ability to express himself by facial twists make him a good camera subject. These facts, combined with his own inimitable philosophy and witticisms, go to make of him one of the few real humorists of the screen today.

Rembusch Meets Zukor

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland—Frank Rembusch, chairman of the Committee of 17, accidentally met Adolph Zukor in a corridor of the Hotel Cleveland late Tuesday night.

Rembusch asked Zukor about Famous Players' theater buying. The latter told Rembusch that Paramount did not want to buy theaters and would not if assured exhibition of its product. Zukor further added that Paramount was only buying houses to insure this.

Rembusch reported Mr. Zukor's remarks to the convention yesterday.

Theater Party Last Night

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland—Everybody, or nearly everybody, stopped talking about conventions last night and went to see a show at one of the local theaters.

A goodly number saw Douglas Fairbanks' latest production, "The Mollycoddle," at the Stillman theater. Paul Lazarus, Charlie Moyer, Kenneth McGaffey and Carlyle Robinson are telling the cinema world here about United Artists.

Exhibitors Band Together

pledged to carry on the work.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America—the Alfred S. Black organization—is not a party to the above plan. Mr. Black has withdrawn from all activities at the convention and charges that the Cohen-Rembusch joint conventions are being railroaded through. Mr. Black further specifically charges that the screen slide advertising plan has been accepted by the exhibitors at the convention and that many of the exhibitors did not know for what they were voting.

H. H. Lustig of the Cleveland M. P. Exhibitors' Association of Ohio has been elected permanent chairman of the convention and Willard C. Patterson of the Criterion theater, Atlanta, secretary.

The Committee of 17, which was instructed at the time of the Chicago convention of independent exhibitors to ascertain the attitude of the producers on the exhibiting question, has submitted its report. It was read by Frank Rembusch, chairman of the committee.

The committee recommended that an important man like former President William Howard Taft be secured to head the combined exhibitor organization. The committee report stated that business should be transacted only with independent producers who are not in any way affiliated with the theater end of the business. Each exhibitor who is a member of the new organization should have a vote, the committee recommended.

Considerable interest was attached to the section of the report pertaining to the attitude of the producers on the theater buying problem. First National, Metro, Pathe, Robertson-Cole, Select, United Artists, Universal and Vitagraph are in favor of the plan to bar producers from the exhibiting field.

Goldwyn, the report showed, is in favor of the move with reservations. Famous Players and Fox Film Corp. have not submitted their attitude on the matter at all.

Why Black Withdrew

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland—Alfred S. Black, president of the M. P. Exhibitors of America, Inc., in a letter to WID'S DAILY, explained why his organization withdrew from the Cleveland conventions.

Mr. Black said that the convention is being railroaded and that the slide advertising plan was accepted at the convention. Black charges that members voted for this plan without the knowledge of what they were doing.

Cleveland—The exhibitors and the National Association aren't the only organizations meeting here.

Ohio First National has just completed its annual meeting.

Ohio is the only state in the Union where a complete and practical subfranchise plan has been working during the past two years. It is generally understood that in selling subfranchises in various states First National people prove the practicability of the idea by referring to the Ohio situation.

Manager Lusk of the Cleveland headquarters took franchise holders and other guests to the Carpentier boxing bouts Monday night.

Associated Exhibitors

On Monday there was held at the Statler a meeting of the Board of Directors of Associated Exhibitors. Another meeting was held Tuesday after the arrival of general manager Fred C. Quimby from the Coast, where he has been closing several important matters.

Ben H. Grimm of the publicity department of New York, arranged affairs. Several others of the organization are also here.

Cleveland—The motion picture industry, through the National Association, may participate in the Buenos Aires world's fair which is scheduled for next year.

Watterson Rothacker has already been appointed official photographer of the event.

Aroused Over Bay State Bill

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Boston—Although the Legislature has closed its session, there is still considerable talk here over the veto put on the censorship bill by Governor Coolidge.

Apparently had members of the legislature been aware of the fact that the bill was unconstitutional before committee hearings on it had begun, all the agitation over the passage or defeat of the bill might have been saved.

Philip David. director of the northeastern division of the Cimmunity M. P. Bureau, in an address to the committee when it considered the bill, declared that he thought it to be unconstitutional.

Ibanez Novel for Coast Filming

Metro's production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," originally intended to be made at the New York studios, has been shifted to the West Coast studios at Hollywood.

This change in plans, announced at the Sixty-first street studios, has been made because of the superior natural scenic environment to be found in California and the comparative scarcity of locations about New York suitable t othe nature of the story.

June Mathis, who is writing the scenario of the novel, came on from the Pacific coast last week for the production.

Now she is to return to Hollywood again. She will leave on June 16. The trip will be made, however, solely for "The Four Horsemen. After that is made Miss Mathis will return to New York.

Over Management of St. Louis Theaters—Being Aired in Courts
(Special to WID'S DAILY)

St. .Louis—A. controversy. over ownership and control of 10 picture theaters in this city between the Famous Players Co. of Missouri and the Harry Koplar interests has led to the filing of a suit by the former company to enjoin Koplar and others from interfering with the management of one of the houses, the Arco theater, 4011 Manchester Ave.

The defendants are Harry Koplar, Sol E. Koplar, Nat C. Koplar, all of the Greater Amusement Co.; Police Lieut. McKenna, Police Sergt. Geo. J. Brennan, Matthew J. Walsh, manager of the Arco, and George Carico, watchman there, whom the police placed in charge last week after going to the theater to quell a disturbance between the Koplars on one side and a representative of Famous Players on the other.

The petition alleges that the Koplar interests sold the Arco, along with nine other houses, to Famous Players last March, and that the latter concern took possession March 17. The sale was under a contract by which the purchase money was to be paid at stated intervals and the contract has been faithfully lived up to, according to Frederick L. Cornwall, president of the company. The sum of $64,000 was the consideration for the Arco, he said.

Last week, it is said, representatives of the Koplar interests went to the Arco and attempted to get control o fthe theater. In the disturbance which followed policemen ejected representatives of the Famous Players Company, it is alleged. The police placed Carico, the watchman, in charge. Matthew J. Walsh, the

Cohen Elected President

Heads Combined Exhibitors Organiz ation—Black's Attempt at Disunion Fails—Convention Closes

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland—Sydney S. Cohen was unanimously elected president of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America yesterday. That is the name under which the combined exhibitor bodies will be known.

The convention has appointed a number of committees including one on laws and legislation, ways and means, organization and by-laws. It is generally known here that the personnel of these committees includes men who are strong adherents of Sydney Cohen and his organization.

This fact caused considerable discussion on the floor of the convention and around the hotel. Smith of the Whitehurst interests in Baltimore criticised the appointment of some of the committees openly. He was answered by Charles O'Reilly of the New York State League, who said that two-thirds of the members of the committee on arrangements had not seen each other until selected to act on the same committee.

A telegram was sent to Governor Coolidge of Massachusetts thanking him for his action in vetoing the censorship bill.

Some excitement was caused by a suggestion made by O'Reilly that Marcus Loew be allowed to participate in the convention without a vote. It was finally decided to permit Loew, Alfred S. Black and Sablotsky and MacGuirk of the Stanley Co. of Philadelphia to attend th convention.

Fred J. Herrington of the American Exhibitors' Asso ation of Pennsylvania and West Virginia said that both Adolph Zukor and Marcus Loew were "on the run" and were willing to give the exhibitors any-

After Gish Films?

Reported Exhibitor Organization May Book Pictures Direct

An interesting angle on the Cleveland convention developed yesterday when it was learned from film men who attended the meetings until Wednesday night that the new exhibitor organization may line up a number of productions which will be booked direct to members of the organization without the use of a distributing organization to cut in on whatever profits may accrue.

It was reported that a series of conferences were held between William L. Sherrill and Jesse J. Goldburg of Frohman Amusement Corp. and several of the exhibitor officials in Cleveland regarding the Lillian Gish productions.

Both Mr. Sherrill and Mr. Goldburg arrived in New York from Cleveland yesterday, but would not discuss the matter further than hinting that there were meetings held in Cleveland regarding the distribution of the Gish productions.

manager, is named as a defendant because he is aligned with the Koplars, it was explanied by counsel for the plaintiff.

A. M. Frumberg, attorney for the Greater Amusement Co., denied that Famous Players has carried out its contract. He said that the money was to be paid on or before May 10, and that his client had not received "one cent in a property deal involving $1,640,000," which, he said, was the price for the 10 theaters.

According to Frumberg, the action in the Arco matter is the forerunner in an attempt by the Koplar interests to recover all of the theaters in the deal. He said that Cornwall's company has been operating these theaters since March 17. He said the Koplars intend filing suit to enjoin Famous Players from continuing in control. The theaters besides the Arco are the Kings, Pershing, Shenandoah, Juniata, Novelty, Lafayette, Gravois, Cherokee and Royal.

In the Famous Players' petition it is alleged that the contract specified that the three Koplars were to be employed by the plaintiff. Harry Koplar at $7,500 a year, and the others at $5,500 each, and that they have been receiving this compensation.

thing they asked for.

An eleventh hour attack was made by Alfred S. Black, but it failed to wreck the confidence of the exhibitors in Cohen. Charles O'Reilly, Frank Rembusch and Willard Patterson gave a vote of confidence to Cohen, and Rembusch in answering Black's charges found occasion to rebuke the latter.

Rembusch denied that Vitagraph advanced $1,500 to call the convention. Cohen in answering Black's charges of infidelity said that he had been disciplined by the big interests for his activities in calling the convention.

He further added that "the octopus had take one of his theaters while he was in Albany on legislation." The "octopus" referred to was Marcus Loew, who later came to the platform and said he didn't know he had secured Cohen's theater. Loew offered it back to Cohen, who accepted amid wildest enthusiasm for Loew's generosity.

Each state gave 10 per cent of its share of the $100,000 to be raised, and this, with personal contributions, totaled $14,000, all subscribed in half an hour. Loew gave $2,000; C. H. Miles, who owns four theaters here, $2,000, and the New York League, $1,000.

The officers elected were as follows: Sydney Cohen, New York, president; C. C. Griffin, San Francisco, 1st vice-president; Joe Hopp, Chicago, 2d vice-president; W. C. Patterson, Atlanta, 3d vice-president; C. W. Gates, 4th vice-president; E. T. Peters, Dallas, treasurer; Sam Bullock, Cleveland, executive secretary; M. M. Van Praag, Kansas City, recording secretary.

An executive committee with a member from each shipping zone was appointed as follows:

Buffalo, A. C. Hayman; New York, Charles O'Reilly; Albany, W. H. Linton; Boston, E. H. Horstmann; New Jersey, Joseph Stern; Washington, C. E. Whitehurst; Cleveland, Henry Lustig; Indiana, Frank Rembusch; Atlanta, Jake Wells; Dallas, A. W. Link; Cincinnati, H. Alexander.

The executive committee was still in session late last night.

With the election of officers the convention closed. Minneapolis has made a bid for the next convention. Most of the crowd has left town.

For Self Defense

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland — Before leaving for New York Adolph Zukor issued a statement in which he said Famous Players-Lasky had no idea of entering the exhibiting field until two years ago when a group of exhibitors decided to go into the producing and distributing field and made offers to every star and director employed by Famous Players.

The statement says in part:

'In self-defense we were forced to take steps to provide an outlet for our pictures in every section where the presentation of our product was threatened by activities of exhibitors who were producing and distributing their own pictures. We were faced with a situation in which we were not able to obtain proper representation in many important communities without becoming interested in theaters. We had no desire to enter the exhibiting business. We have no desire to extend our theater operations.

"Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be very glad to confer at all times with a committee representing all exhibitors, including exhibitors who are producing and distributing pictures, for the purpose of bringing about harmony and understanding in all branches of our industry for the mutual benefit of all."

Loew Makes Hit

(Staff Correspondence)

Cleveland—Marcus Loew, when he finally reached the convention floor made the hit of the convention. Loew delivered a "heart-to-heart" talk and told the exhibitors some secrets of his business and why he had Wall Street money in the business. He said he was driven to Metro when threatened with percentage by a big producer he refused to call by name.

Loew warned the exhibitors against opposing the deposit system, saying that independent producers needed the advance deposits to live. His investment in Metro is $5,000,000, Loew said, and he planned investing $4,000,000 more.

Loew advised a careful selection for president and when that was accomplished he urged the exhibitors to stand by their selection loyally.

It developed yesterday that at the Cleveland convention just closed Herman Rifkin of Boston, a well known figure in the state right field, succeeded in perfecting an organization of independent operators which will become active in a few weeks.

Rifkin held proxies for a number of other independents at that meeting. It is understood that as a result of the session an organization was outlined which will be perfected at a meeting to be held in Cleveland June 21.

Rifkin is understood to have lined up about 70 per cent of the country on his idea. It is expected that the new organization will operate along the lines of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., of which Joe Friedman of Chicago is president.

Chandlee and Laub are also engaged at present in the preparation of the sub-titles for "McVeagh of the South Seas," with Harry Carey.

Lynch-Hulsey combination, has been established, with temporary headquarters at 1713½ Commerce St.

Tom Boland, Saul Harris and C. J. Musselman have been granted the Associated franchise for Oklahoma, Texas and Arkansas. E. T. Peters, president of the Texas Exhibitors' Circuit, has been made manager of the exchange.

E. H. Hulsey, who is now affiliated with S. A. Lynch, holds the old First National franchise in the Southwest.

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., began operations with the release of "The River's End," and now lists in its releases practically all of its big features for the summer season as well as for next year.

Associated First National pictures, according to the company's officials, will therefore not be available to Hulsey, who holds the old First National franchise for his territory. The new First National productions will be available to Tom Boland, Saul Harris and Musselman, who have been granted the franchise for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

In this way, Associated First National plans, to get a maximum of representation for its pictures in the Southwest.

It was further learned that if as has been the case until now, American exhibitors and exchanges maintain their indifference towards playing the British pictures, the new company will either build or acquire theaters throughout the country to show the films.

If such should be the case, it will mean the first earnest effort on the part of British producers to insist upon securing screens for their pictures in this country.

Mr. Warde could not be reached at his office late yesterday afternoon for a verification of the above facts.

Over Statement That Film Companies Are Averse to Helping Los Angeles

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Considerable stir was caused here by the publication of a lengthy article in the Times to the effect that the motion picture companies were opposed to taking part in anything that might benefit Los Angeles and the Chamber of Commerce.

It seems that the statement was made to the Times by Walter Long, who has appeared in a number of Paramount productions made here, and who acted as manager for the all-star performances of "Arizona" at Clune's Auditorium.

Long, it appears, made the remark to a city official who wanted to make an announcement from the stage regarding the purchase of school bonds.

Long's statement was taken up with the Chamber of Commerce, who conducted an investigation among the producing companies.

Abraham Lehr, president of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, which includes practically all of the producers in California, denied Long's statement. It later developed that Long was expressing his own sentiments and not those of the industry at large.

The newspapers here played up the story and devoted quite some space to it.

Offers 20% Discount

Robert W. Priest of the Film Market, Inc., who handles the sales on "The House Without Children," is offering a 20 per cent discount to independent buyers from June 15 to July 15.

Priest will allow buyers to figure their own territories and then deduct the discount. The picture is scheduled at $100,000.

Reichenbach to Entertain

Harry Reichenbach was so glad to get back to New York from Cleveland that he invited the A. M. P. A. to be his guests at a golf tournament which he will conduct at the Bayside Country Club next week.

The advertisers weren't so keen about the golf part but when Harry said he would also tender a luncheon the invitation was accepted with alacrity.

Ballin Getting Ready

Hugo Ballin expects to start work shortly on "The Honorable Gentlemen," by Achmed Abdullah, as his first independent production.

While Ballin has an option on all of Abdullah's writings he will not confine himself exclusively to those works, but will make a second picture from a story by another author. The third production will probably be another Abdullah story.

The Personal Appearance Trick

H. H. Van Loan, scenario writer, made personal appearances at the Playhouse in Hudson, N. Y., while his picture "The Virgin of Stamboul" was playing there. Hudson is Van Loan's home town and they handed him more publicity than the picture itself.

Coast Says New Unit Will Make 4 Pictures a Year—No Confirmation Here

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—It is reported here that Madlaine Traverse, who recently left Fox, will head her own producing unit and that she has completed arrangements with three New York business men to finance the company.

It is further reported that Miss Traverse's services are tied up for two years and that in that period 8 productions will be made. The first will be an original story by Samuel Merwin.

Work is to be started about Sept. 1 in California, although the character of the first picture may necessitate a trip to Honolulu and Japan.

Miss Traverse, as noted, is in New York stopping at the Algonquin. An effort to reach her for verification of the above proved futile.

Labor as a Producer

New Twist in Picture Making in the Air—Working Classes Seek Fair Play on Screen

If organized labor cannot obtain what it terms "fair play" on the screens of the country, it is very likely that hundreds of unions will enter the exhibiting field on their own hook.

According to Louis Gardy, dramatic and motion picture editor of the New York Call, a strong Socialist and labor organ, the American Federation of Labor, the organized railroad brotherhoods and various other organized labor bodies whose membership aggregates almost 10,000,000, are disgusted with the methods used by picture producers in showing various issues in which labor is involved. They say, states Gardy, that invariably the employer's side of the problem involved is incorporated in the films while the working man's version of the story is eliminated.

Gardy on Saturday emphasized the point that the impression in labor circles had no political strings attached to it since a considerable percentage of organized labor bodies did not belong to the Socialist party.

As concrete evidence of the growth of the movement for exhibition of labor films, Gardy said that in New York there has been formed a body known as the Labor Film Service, Inc., Herman Ross, manager, which has been authorized by the Central Federated Union, the local branch of the American Federation of Labor, to solicit the raising of $50,000 among labor locals and individuals for the production of a labor film.

Results Based on Government Tax Returns—Yearly Total Will Average 83 Millions—All Distributors Included in Compilation

WID'S DAILY herewith presents what is believed to be the first concrete evidence as to the volume of business done by the motion picture distributors of the country.

The figures given are official and are taken from the records now on file in the offices of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, at Washington.

The exhibitors of the country are at present paying a 5 per cent tax on their film rentals. Therefore with the revenue the government derives from this source as its basis the following interesting data is obtainable:

For the month of March, 1920, which includes the latest tabulations of data of this character, the Federal Government secured from the renting or leasing of film $565,854.47. This being

To Be Handled by New Independent Combination—Zierler Tells of Plans

Sixteen productions a year will be handled by the new combination of independent exchangemen formed by Herman Rifkin of Boston in Cleveland last week.

Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corp., who attended the Cleveland meetings, said on Saturday that the independents interested in the new proposition were really in earnest and that they planned a national organization which would last permanently.

The organization, according to Zierler, will be in the market for independent productions and if those productions are not obtained with sufficient regularity, the organization will produce pictures itself or finance productions.

Another interesting angle on the project is a plan by which exhibitors will share in the profits of distribution. With this as an inducement, it is figured a maximum of distribution will be obtained for the organization.

The body will be definitely rounded out at the meeting scheduled for Cleveland on June 21.

Zierler will have the New York and the New Jersey franchises.

Bryan Sued Over Film Contract

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—William Jennings Bryan is being sued by George R. Dalton who is seeking an injunction to restrain Bryan from appearing in films which deal with prohibition.

Dalton says Bryan agreed to appear in a prohibition film, but later changed his mind because he, it is alleged, wanted a greater share of the profits. Dalton sues for money which he says he invested personally and the amount he says he lost because of Bryan's change of mind.

J. Stuart Blackton actually started a production in which Bryan was to appear, but because of various delays Blackton changed the subject to an out-an-out entertainment film and released it as "The Moonshine Trail" through Pathe.

Schnitzer, Equity President

Joseph Schnitzer, it developed on Saturday, is now president of Equity Pictures Corp.

Schnitzer's election occurred at the recent meeting of the company's directors. Herbert K. Somborn, former president, has resigned.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Stockton, Cal.—It will be many a day before theater fans here forget about the stunt engineered by Mr. Brubeck, manager of the T. & D. theater, accomplished with the aid of a set of false teeth, a loyal newspaper reporter and the police department.

Just what connection a pair of false teeth could have with the showing of Charlie Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure" is hard to say. It is now a matter of public record, however, that during the showing of this picture the following little squib appeared in the want-ad columns of Stockton's newspapers:

"FOUND—At the T. & D. Wednesday, a set of false teeth. Owner may recover them by calling at the office of the theater and identifying property."

And a day later the following story in the news columns of the Stockton Daily Independent was found:

"FOUND—At the T. & D. Wednesday, a set of false teeth. Owner may recover them by calling at the office of the theater and identifying property.

"And thereby hangs a tale. When the janitor was white-winging the T. & D. last night he received a distinct shock. Under one of the seats he discovered a plate with a set of false teeth. He arrived at the conclusion that the owner had laughed the teeth out of his head while watching the latest Charlie Chaplin picture, "A Day's Pleasure"

The janitor insisted that when he started out of the auditorium with the teeth they began to struggle and tried to bite him, but this has not been corroborated by an interview with the teeth. They are now safely caged in the strong box of the manager of the theater and will be turned over to their owner upon proper identification.

"Speaking of Charlie Chaplin, a dispatch from Los Angeles announced that the police have a warrant out for him for going only 40 miles an hour on the Wilshire boulevard. As he had disappeared they could not serve the warrant. A man who was either Chaplin or a dead ringer for him was seen in an automobile on the streets of Stockton yesterday several times."

Undoubtedly the exhibitor can realize the publicity started through such a story in a newspaper. But Brubeck went further.

As a matter of fact, Chaplin was really being sought by a sheriff with a warrant for his arrest . It seems he had failed to appear in court in answer to a charge against him for speeding. Brubeck quickly seized on this by arranging for a man who did resemble the comedian to a marked degree to run about the streets of Stockton in a flivver. Brubeck concealed the fact that this imitator was to be arrested as a fugitive from justice from the bogus Chaplin and when the arrest was really made, it was as much of a surprise to the impersonator as to the city itself.

Of course the charge was a fake and the police who were very friendly to Brubeck, knew exactly what they were doing. Nevertheless the stunt brought unprecedented publicity and directed the attention of the entire city toward the T. & D. theater and Chaplin's picture, "A Day's Pleasure."

The teeth served their purpose well until the last showing of the picture. The management hung the set up in front of the house and during intermissions ran an ad similar to that which had appeared in the "Lost and Found" columns of local newspapers.

An Honor Indeed

Murray W. Garsson of Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., was all fussed up Saturday over the wire he received from Tom Moore asking for a print of "A Dream of Fair Women," because President Wilson expressed a desire to see the picture.

Garsson got busy and dispatched a special print to Washington at once. He's dead sure the President will like it.

Labor as a Producer

In Paterson, N. J., the Amalgamated Textile Workers have taken over a 1,400 seat theater at 90 Market st. in which they will show exclusively labor films and labor theatrical entertainments. This organization and the Central Federated Union are not socialist bodies.

In Seattle, a company backed by labor organizations and known as Federation Films is being formed for the purpose of making and exhibiting films which are designed to show labor in its true light.

In Pittsburgh, a man named John V. Salyton has been working for two years on a labor film production idea. He is raising $35,000 with which he will make a picture called "The Contrast."

In New York, says Gardy, two of the largest labor organizations in the city are very seriously thinking of entering the production of labor films. These bodies are the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the International Ladies' Garment Workers.

Gardy said that labor was not seeking sympathy from the public, but that it demanded that both sides of a controversy be shown or neither side shown. He said he actually knows of cases where scenes of armed guards battering down strikers in the Pennsylvania steel districts were suppressed and never reached the public's sight.

At the recent Socialist convention in New York, Gardy was appointed a committee of one to investigate the film angle on the labor question and see what could be done along production lines, with the official sanction of the Socialist party.

H. B. Warner, after a vacation, will shortly start work on a crook story which Henry King will direct.

A Jesse D. Hampton special has been finished. This has been in production since April and has Mahlon Hamilton and Lillian Rich in the leading roles. Robert Thornby directed that also.

$62,520,167.20 in Rentals

a 5 per cent on the gross, it develops that the total volume of business done by all the distributing organizations in the business reached $11,317,089.40 for the month of March.

For the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1919, up to and including March 31, 1920, the Government was paid $3,126,008.36 in rental taxes. For that period, therefore, which covers nine months of the fiscal year, the total business in rentals reached $62,520,167.20.

With the nine months' period as a basis, the average amount paid to the revenue department in taxes for every month of 1919 beginning with July and every month of this year up to and including March is $347,334.26 2/9, or in terms of gross rentals, $6,946,685.24 4/9 for each month.

The fiscal year ends June 30. Estimating the total for the financial year on the basis of above, the total taxes paid into the national treasury in taxes for the use of films for 1919-1920 year will reach $4,168,011.14 2/3. This would indicate the the total business conducted by various and all distributors in the business will reach $83,360,222.93 1/3.

Of course, the yearly estimate is purely hypothetical in so far as gauging definite figures are concerned, in view of the fact that the fiscal year does not expire until the end of this month and in view of the fact that business usually falls off during the summer months.

In this connection it is interesting to note that Famous Players, the only distributor which makes public its annual report, in its statement for 1919, issued in April, gave its gross business as $27,165,326. Since the company sells posters and advertising accessories, this amount in all likelihood includes those items and is not strictly a film leasing item. However, using approximate percentages, Famous Players does 32½ per cent of the business in the entire industry.

Cuts and Flashes

William Farnum has begun work on "The Scuttlers" for Fox.

Zena Keefe will appear in Ralph Ince's production, "Red Foam."

Warren Cook has signed a long term contract to appear with the stock company being assembled by Selznick to support the stars of that organization.

"Times" Takes a Rap

Hints News Reels Had Something "Put Over" When They Filmed Eugene Debs at Atlanta

The New York Times said editorially in part on Saturday:

"Moving picture houses throughout the country are exhibiting the scene at Atlanta Prison that took place when Eugene V. Debs was formally notified that the Socialist party had made him its candidate for President.

"It is not a genuine scene; it is a performance carefully planned and rehearsed with a view to creating sympathy among the unthinking. Mr. Debs embraces the emissaries of his party—actually kisses them. When the hollow sham is thus coldly described, few can escape a shiver of repugnance.

"Under the influence of this unreasoning mob psychology," continues the Times in another portion of the editorial, "the acknowledged criminal is nightly applauded as loudly as many of the candidates for the presidency who have won their honorable eminence by great and unflagging service to the American people. * * *

"It is probably too late to prevent the exhibition of the pictures," but the Times goes on to say that "it is not too late to provide that * * * the basic truth shall be made known to all."

The news weeklies who shot scenes of the Debs ceremony in Atlanta were International and Selznick Weeklies. E. B. Hatrick, editor of the International News Weekly, was out of town on Saturday and could not be reached for a statement. However, a person connected with the weekly said that the Times' ideas were ridiculous. No one connected with Selznick Weekly could be be reached.

The pictures showing Debs were incorporated into the news reels shown at the Rialto and Rivoli last week. When George Shor, director of publicity for those theaters, was asked about the point made by the Times he said on Saturday, speaking for Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld:

"We try to select and edit our news weekly with as much discrimination and care as the Times uses in editing its news stories."

International used the Debs films as part of the reel in which the presidential nominees and candidates for nomination of all parties were shown. The film was also used last week over the metropolitan Loew circuit.

Makes Wilson Offer

English Company Would Make Film Written by the President

The Alliance Film Corp., Ltd., of London, England, a $5,000,000 company, yesterday sent a wire to President Wilson in Washington in which an offer was made to produce a gigantic film embodying Mr. Wilson's ideas on international peace.

The wire was sent by Charles Frederick Higham, managing director of the company and a member of Parliament, from the South Islington district of London.

Mr. Higham offers Wilson the facilities of his studio and company in England. The plan would provide for the President's visit to London when his tenure of office expires, while Alliance will pay the President, if it is so desired, a sum commensurate with his high standing and dignity.

Tarkington Stories for Goldwyn

The contract which Tarkington Baker held with Booth Tarkington for original stories for screen productions has been taken over by Goldwyn.

Baker is en route to India for Famous Players.

Another Combine

Ivan Abramson has issued a call for a meeting of independent exchangemen to be held at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, July 7.

It is said that articles of incorporation for the new company which will be a distributing body are now being filed and at the Chicago meeting it is planned to make the body a permanent one. Several well known independent exchangemen are said to be sponsors for the project, but who they are outside of Abramson has not been determined.

The origin of this combination of independents was at the recent Cleveland convention.

Judging from various projects now either under way or being contemplated the independent exchangemen feel that something must be done to secure sufficient high-grade product to meet their needs.

Federated Film Exchanges of America have been formed; Herman Rifkin is starting another, Harry Sherman's ideas, details of which appear elsewhere in this issue, is a third and Abramson is interested in the fourth.

Sues for $100,000

V. B. K. Film Corp. Files Action Against Mrs. Sidney Drew

The V. B. K. Film Corp. filed suit in the Supreme Court yesterday against Mrs. Sidney Drew for $100,000 damages for breach of contract.

The complaint alleges that on April 22, 1919, Mrs. Drew made a contract with Amedee J. Van Buren to appear exclusively in motion picture films for him and to give her services to aid in manufacturing such films, and she agreed not to become identified with any other motion picture corporation. It is alleged that she refused to carry out her contract and as the result of this, it is alleged that a contract for the distribution of such film was cancelled, causing the damages sued for.

Mrs. Drew's comedies with John Cumberland are released through Pathe.

An effort to reach Mrs. Drew yesterday for a statement failed.

De Haven Series?

Reported Comedians Will Make Several Films for First National

It was reported yesterday that Mr. and Mrs. Carten De Haven will make a series of productions for First National.

One, "Twin Beds," has been officially announced, but a First National official yesterday said he hadn't heard about the series.

The De Havens have effected a tie-up with Arthur S. Kane, who will handle their business with the First National.

Word was received in New York yesterday that Harry Musgrove, formerly general manager of Australasian Films, Ltd., is in Los Angeles and that he will arrive in New York June 24.

More Announcements Coming

Official announcements hanging fire for the new season are now swelled with the promised statements from Goldwyn and Pioneer.

Franchise Scheme

Being Developed by Harry Sherman —Plans 12 Pictures a Year

Harry A. Sherman, who formed Sherman Productions Corp. in Delaware last week with a capital of $4,000,000, is rounding out a new franchise scheme in which independent exchanges are to play an important factor.

Sherman plans to divide the country into 25 territories and the funds turned in by the various exchange men, according to the percentages of each territory, are to be held in trust in New York. They will total $100,000.

Sherman plans to have the franchise holders pay the actual cost of production of each of the 12 pictures he will make annually and also pay on a cost basis for a complete line of accessories and lithographs. The contract with franchise holders provides for a minimum of ten pages of advertising to be used weekly in the trade papers thus assuring a national advertising campaign for the productions.

At Broadway Theaters

Strand

The Strand is doing unusual business for hot weather this week and there is no need to look farther than the feature, "The Mollycoddle," Douglas Fairbanks' latest, to discover the reason why. The surrounding program is also in a light vein, even to the overture, which is a selection from Victor Herbert's "The Fortune Teller." The review and the singing of "Santa Lucia" by a baritone follow in order. At the close of the feature there are more vocal numbers rendered by Eldora Stanford, soprano. The James Montgomery Flagg comedy, "Pride an' Po'k Chops," came nowhere near registering like the first pictures of this once famous series. Selections from "Il Trovatore" on the organ conclude.

Capitol

The second week of the Rothapfel regime at the Capitol offers a delightful variety of entertainment with numbers that will appeal to both old and young. The opening overture is of a tuneful march entitled, "Pomp and Circumstances." In this, as at intervals throughout the program, the Capitol ensemble assists.

An attractive and highly colorful ballet number precedes the first scenic number, pictures of the Alps. During the run of this picture the chorus sings "On the Alps" and "A Tyrolean Folk Song." Bertram Peacock and male ensemble render "On the Road to Mandalay." A very pretty setting is supplied.

Prior to the feature, Jack Pickford in "A Double Dyed Deceiver," which is the last number on the program, Miss Williams sings "Las Golondrinas" and the Solti Duo dance the Tango Argentino.

Rivoli

Broadway is just seeing Douglas MacLean and Doris May in "Let's Be Fashionable." Much of its comedy registers well but it seemed just a bit over-burlesqued in spots according to the reception it received Monday afternoon. The bit showing milk being put in the auto radiator, while it brought some laughs, also caused some astonishingly adverse comment. Probably the seeming extravagance of such a scene created this effect. The Carter de Haven comedy, "Beating Cheaters," got over in good fashion. The bill opens with "Beautiful Galatea" as the overture. The scenic "Tree Magic" accompanied by singing off-stage was a bit too flighty and "up in the clouds" to bring much response. The pictorial scored with interesting pictures of the Republican convention and glimpses of the presidential nominee. A musical number which registered a distinct hit was the singing of a number of old songs by the Rivoli ensemble. "Long, Long Ago," "I Cannot Sing the Old Songs" and "In the Gloaming" were the selections and they went big. Following the feature the orchestra rendered a novelty that brought rounds of applause, this being Lampe's "Fun in a Music Store." The special effects were novel and funny and the explanatory note on the program helped put the piece over in fine style. Following the de Haven comedy "Petit Fantasy," another unusual musical piece, on the organ concluded.

Rialto

Wanda Hawley is being very well received at the Rialto in her first Realart starring picture, "Miss Hobbs." She herself attracts while the story proves to be a very wise choice. The supporting cast also comes in for considerable praise. "Miss Hobbs" is a light comedy and it is to be hoped the rest of Miss Hawley's pictures are in the same vein considering the reception this is receiving. Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Lower World" is the overture and its sweeping instrumentalism and resounding crashes strike a very popular chord. Included in the first part of the magazine are several animal pictures which register nicely. Warren Harding, Republican presidential nominee, fails to get as much applause as his running mate, Governor Coolidge. "Serenada" on the 'cello gets a good share of applause. The feature is followed by Grace Hoffman singing the bell song from "Lakme" and a Sunshine comedy, "Monkey Business," registers with its riotous humor.

Collier at Broadway

"The Servant Question" with William Collier will finally make its appearance at the Broadway next week after various postponements.

Two Marion Davies pictures will be made in California following "Buried Treasure." Frank Borzage will direct them.

Makes Wilson Offer

The completed picture, if the plan materializes, will be distributed all over the world at the expense of Alliance as a measure to promote international relations and to offset the growth of Bolshevism.

Mr. Higham is known as one of the leaders of the advertising world in Britain and has been in this country for about three weeks, although that fact has not been very generally known.

His visit here is for the purpose of studying film conditions and the lining up of American technical men and American equipment.

Alliance Film is the company which has arranged for American distribution through First National.

Mr. Higham in an interview yesterday at the Claridge was very frank and outspoken in his opinions. He said that he was prompted to enter the film business in England because he feared that by the continued showing of American films in Great Britain's colonial possessions the point would be eventually reached where those possessions would break away from the British Empire.

In speaking of Alliance's plans Mr. Higham said that already one film, "The Holiday Husband," has been completed at the studio formerly occupied by the London Film Co. "Carnival" is now being made.

The company will make eight features this year and four special productions with a possibility of one brand of two reel comedies. By next year this amount of product will be doubled.

Through the control of the British Actor's Film Co. Alliance is assured of some of the best artists in England, said Higham. As yet nothing has been done regarding distribution in England, but an offer has been made by Walturdaw, the First National English releasing organization.

Higham became interested in Alliance through Coleman Goodman, a member of the British Order of the Empire and owner of a number of theaters in England. Mr. Goodman is Irene Castle's brother-in-law.

Higham will remain here until the 23rd and then leave for home on the steamer Fort Victoria from Boston.

Alliance plans to develop its own stars in England. It is possible that to supplement the First National publicity organization, Alliance will inaugurate in this country a service of its own to bring its product before the public.

Chautard Starts Work

"The Thief," Henri Bernstein's detective story, is Emile Chautard's first production for William Fox. Chautard has started work on it.

Franchise Scheme

In return for all this Sherman is asking 20 per cent of the gross business done by the exchanges in their respective territories. He, in turn, will control and sell the foreign rights while 50 per cent of the revenue accrued from this source will be divided and returned pro rata among the franchise members.

The scheme of operation provides that the franchises shall run for five years. Sherman, under the terms of the agreement, cannot touch the funds to be held in New York unless the franchise holder fails to keep his agreement.

Sherman's production plans call for 12 pictures a year. The first of these will be a western story with a male star already engaged. Work will be started on this about Aug. 16 at the Burston studio on the coast. Four westerns all from well known books are scheduled for this star, while a series of four will be made with a woman star whose name will be announced shortly. The remaining four of the series will be all-star productions from either books or plays.

Sherman will leave on Saturday for a country-wide trip to close up open territory. He says 30 per cent has already been disposed of and that some of the money from the franchise holders has already been paid in.

According to Sherman, he does not plan to interfere in any great degree with the working of the releasing organization and says that the franchise holders will be permitted to elect their own president. Sherman is willing to have as treasurer of his producing company a man selected by the exchangemen to keep tabs on production costs.

Yokohama Applies Strict Censorship

Japan is the latest country to put into effect a strict censorship of pictures, according to a report received by David P. Howells from Horace T. Clarke, his representative in the Orient.

"A special building for censorship purposes," writes Clarke, "is to be erected immediately in the yard of the Kanagawa courthouse and is expected to be completed about the 1st of July. After that date, the Yokohama police will view every picture and it will be necessary that it receive their approval before it can be shown in the theaters.

"The police will require that all women be seated in a separate section of the theater irrespective of their social status and irrespective of whether they are accompanied by male escorts or not."

Coast Unit Circularizing Public—Lists Independent Exchanges as Allies

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—The Renco Film Co. with offices at 724 S. Spring St., this city, is conducting an extensive campaign with the public through circular letters for the purpose of selling stock. The officers of the company are H. J. Reynolds, president; E. Daum, secretary, and H. L. Hoskins, treasurer.

The company in an attractive pamphlet speaks of its production plans and states that it is in the market for well known books and stars.

Regarding distribution, the pamphlet says that the country has been divided into 21 districts and gives the following independent exchanges as its distributing allies:

All-Star Features Dist., Inc., San Francisco; Aywon Film Corp., New York; Blanchard Amusement Co., Davenport, Ia.; Bijou Theatrical Enterprise Co., Battle Creek, Mich.; Apex Pictures, Inc., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Doll-Van Film Corp., Chicago; Exhibitors Film Exchange, Washington; All-Star Features Dist., Inc., Los Angeles; Crescent Film Co., Kansas City; Eastern Feature Film Co., Boston; Doll-Van Film Corp., Indianapolis; Elliott Film Corp., Minneapolis; Fine Arts Film Exchange, Cincinnati; Gardiner Syndicate, Buffalo; Greiver Prod., Chicago; Ohio Film Classics Co., Cleveland; E. C. Peto Enterprises, St. Louis; DeLuxe Feature Film Co., Seattle; State Rights Distributors, New York; Southeastern Pictures Corp., Atlanta; Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Detroit; Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, Atlanta; C. C. Hite Attractions Co., Cincinnati; Minter-United Amusements, Detroit; Gollos, Chappell & Cohen, Tex., Okla. and Ark.

In one portion of its literature, figures are given purporting to show the profits made by some pictures. "Traffic in Souls" is given as having cost $45,000 and its earnings $450,000. "The Birth of a Nation" is mentioned as having made "more than 1800% on the original investment." "Cabiria" is mentioned as having brought $1,500,000 for the American rights.

Subscriptions to stock are for no less than 10 shares at $1 a share or for more than 100. The company was chartered in Delaware at $1,000,000 with 1,000,000 shares at $1 par value.

Dover, Del.—The Renco Film Co. was formed in this state the early part of March. The company is chartered at $1,000,000.

Nathan Hirsch of Aywon could not be reached yesterday for a statement as to what productions Renco had to offer.

Bessie Love Coming East

Los Angeles—Bessie Love is working on the final scenes of her second Callaghan picture, "Bonnie May," and will leave for the East early next week.

Drawing Contest Decided

In the contest held by Equity Pictures to select the best drawing of Clara Kimball Young's eyes, 8,742 were submitted, and Alma M. Carlson of Chicago was awarded the first prize by the judges, Clara Kimball Young, Rolf Armstrong, cover artist of the Photoplay magazine, and James R. Quirk, publisher of Photoplay. Nine prizes, ranging from $150 down, were offered.

Officers Elected

Frank A. Garbutt Heads New Co-Operative Buying Unit of Coast Producers

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Frank A. Garbutt, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky, was elected president of the Cinema Mercantile Corp. at a meeting held at the L. A. Athletic Club. Other officers of the new body which will buy collectively whatever materials are needed by local producers for their pictures are Joseph Engel of Metro, vice-president; Abraham Lehr, Goldwyn, second vice-president; Sol Wurtzel, Fox, third vice-president, and W. J. Reynolds, secretary and treasurer.

When the discussion over Walter Long's statements regarding the attitude of film folks toward Los Angeles and the Chamber of Commerce was at its height there was some talk that the new alliance of producers was for the purpose of boycotting Los Angeles merchants. This, however, is said not to be the case. The Times quotes one member of the organization as follows:

"All things being equal, we had rather spend our money with Los Angeles business houses. We shall do our buying wherever we secure the best price and probably a great deal of it will be done here."

The Times also published a letter from the Rev. Baker P. Lee, who decries the barring from various clubs of members of the picture business and then says:

"If the Chamber of Commerce and other business men's associations of Los Angeles would only realize that while 80 per cent of the films are made here, 98 per cent of the money goes back East to the distributor and releaser, and that if we would open a drive for local capital to turn this tide of profit here it would amount to a greater investment for this city than the rubber tire industry and citrus crops combined."

Hamilton Serial for Pathe

A serial for production by Pathe in the near future has been written by James Shelly Hamilton, author of numerous magazine stories.

Important Ruling

An important ruling as to the right of moving picture performers to sue for damages for injuries sustained in the course of their employment through the alleged negligence of their employers has been handed down by Supreme Court Justice Giegerich in suits by Nellie Michel and one Jee, a Chinaman, against the American Cinema Corp. for damages for injuries sustained when a balcony collapsed while the barroom scene in "The Inner Voice" was being filmed in the Mirror Studios in Queens.

One of the defences was that the plaintiffs must ask for an allowance under the Workman's Compensation Law, either under the section of the law relating to the "manufacture of moving picture films" or the section relating to any employment not specified in which four or more "workmen or operatives are regularly employed."

Justice Giegerich decides that there is nothing in the pleadings showing that the latter section applies, while as to the "manufacture of moving picture films" the court rules that the plaintiffs were not so engaged at the time of the accident.

The defendant must file a new answer.

More Rental Figures

Over 25 Million in First Quarter of 1920—Admission Tax Returns Not Available

Additional information as to the rental taxes paid by motion picture distributors to the Federal Government received by WID'S DAILY show that $1,274,756.65 was paid into the government treasury during the first three months of 1920 under the five per cent tax law. The total rental business done then in January, February and March of this year was $25,495,133.

Government figures show that the rental taxes for January totaled $412,979.11, February $295.923.07, and March, as published on Monday, $565,854.47. The gross rentals for those months are: January, $8.259,582.20; for February, $5,918,461.40, and for March, $11,317,089.40.

It is learned from officials in Washington that because of errors in keeping accounts in various revenue districts the receipts from the rental tax for the first few months that it was in effect are incorrect, although the collections were made by treasury department operatives correctly.

Regarding the above figures, it is learned that the apparent discrepancy between the collections for January, February and March is explained by the fact that some of the companies pay their returns in bulk and at earlier dates than the other distributors in the business. It is this that accounts, then, for the March total of town yesterday and in his absence no one would discuss the report that the National Association as a united body would back the laboratories to the limit in opposing the demands made by the union.

Inquiries made among laboratory men yesterday brought forth the fact that the increases asked for in almost every instance aggregated 100 per cent.

According to a circular letter sent to all laboratories around New York, the demands of the union are in part as follows:

No member is to work in a laboratory where union laws are violated.

A working week is to be composed of 44 hours. This means half day Saturday all year around. The laboratories as a rule grant the half day on Saturdays during the summer months.

All legal holidays are to be observed with full pay. This is to include such holidays as Lincoln's and Washington's birthdays, Independence Day, Columbus Day, etc. Laboratories, generally speaking, observe five holidays throughout the year.

Before discharging an employee the laboratory must submit the action to a grievance committee of the union.

The new wage scale on a weekly basis is as follows:

Assistant superintendent, $125; editor, $100; timers, $100; a second timer, $90; negative developer, $85; inspector, $75; positive developer, $65; foreman cutting room, $75; foreman printing room, $50; foreman joining room, $60; foreman perforating room, $50; foreman examining room, $50; foreman wash room, $50; foreman drying room, $50; title cameraman, $50; general foreman, $50; negative cutter, $40, and others.

One laboratory man stated yesterday that some of the jobs outlined in the union demands were new ones on him.

Universal Has Cannibal Films

Ed Laemmle, nephew of Carl Laemmle, has just returned to New York after spending a year with the Laemmle-Adler expedition in Borneo, Siam, the Malay States and nearby territory. He has with him about 40,000 feet of film showing the customs and ceremonies of the cannibals and head hunters which Universal may release in feature form.

being over half a million, while February totals less than the $300,000 mark.

In view of this it is apparent that it is impossible to gauge the exact amount of business done by the distributors for each month of the year since the returns are not tabulated at the exact time the business is done by the distributor but according to the time at which the returns reach Washington.

An effort was made to secure from the Government figures which would indicate the volume of business done by the exhibitors in admissions. This can be secured through the now operative 10 per cent admission tax. Treasury officials, however, state that the government does not segregate the taxes derived from motion picture theaters and those derived from stage performances. The returns for the 64 Internal Revenue districts can be obtained, but there will be nothing to indicate just what percentage of the business was done by picture theaters.

The Government, by law, is compelled to keep confidential the nature of all tax returns submitted by companies and for that reason it will be impossible to tabulate the gross business done by individual companies in the business. This law is so strictly adhered to that the Government has refused to provide courts with such figures.

F. P. Field Changes

Al Lichtman announced the following yesterday:

Herbert I. Kraus, formerly sales manager at the Detroit office, is now branch manager at Boston, succeeding J. A. McConville, resigned.

Myron H. Lewis, formerly special representative with headquarters in Kansas City, will act as assistant to S. R. Kent, general sales manager, and R. C. LiBeau is moved from Des Moines to the post vacated by Lewis.

A special showing of "Suds" will be given either on Sunday night or some night the early part of next week at Aeolian Hall. This has not been decided upon. Mrs. Charlotte Pickford will be presented with the seal and an invited audience will view the film.

United Artists yesterday in a statement called the issuance of the seal to "Suds" "an exceptional honor," and a special wireless was sent to Miss Pickford, who is en route to Europe, notifying her of the award.

Ward and Cundy Perfecting New Organization—Walter Seeley Interested

Harry Ward, managing director of Hayward Prod. and one of the principals interested in the recently perfected Cinema Sales Corp. of Great Britain, said yesterday:

"I have just arrived in your country, preparatory to the formation of the Cinema Sales Corp., an organization which will specialize in the distribution of American productions of quality in the United Kingdom. The new company will not in any way interfere with my affiliation with Hayward Productions.

"Henry Cundy, my business associate, has accompanied me on this trip. Our mission is to obtain the best American productions, and we are prepared to negotiate at once for the acquisition of such productions for the United Kingdom. In this connection we are pleased to announce that we are working in association with Walter Hoff Seeley, American representative of the Cinema Sales Corporation, with offices at 50 East 42nd St."

Ward also stated he has already completed negotiations for the distribution of a number of American films in Great Britain.

Hirsh Bought One Film from Renco

Nathan Hirsh of Aywon Film Corp. stated yesterday that the only dealings he had ever had with the Renco Film Co. of Los Angeles, regarding whose activities WID'S DAILY printed a special dispatch from Los Angeles yesterday was the purchase of New York rights to "The Birth of a Race."

"We bought that picture," said Hirsh yesterday, "on a percentage basis and I suppose they are using our name now on the strength of that. They have not consulted me on the matter."

When Hirsh bought the Renco film the company's offices were in Chicago.

Penn. Exhib. Organize

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Altoona, Pa.—The Keystone Exhibitors' Association, composed of motion picture theater owners in Central Pennsylvania, including Blair and eight adjoining counties, was formed at a meeting held in the Strand theater on Sunday afternoon. Already more than fifty exhibitors have become affiliated with the new organization.

The aim of the association is to secure an equitable and uniform contract for all exhibitors, and for the abolition of the deposit system, to prevent the imposition of representatives of producers peddling their pictures on a bidding system, thus running up the prices in the district in which the highest prices of any place in the country have been paid, it is said.

The election of officers for the association resulted in the following: President, Jacob Silverman of the Strand; vice-president, L. W. Barclay of Johnstown; secretary, C. O. Baird of Portage, and treasurer, A. Notopoulos, of this city.

An executive board consisting of one man from each of the nine counties, will be selected at the next meeting, which is to be held in Johnstown on Sunday, July 11.

In speaking of the new organization Mr. Silverman said:

"This organization came into existence a few weeks before the late big convention in Cleveland. The purpose is to make it manifest that the exhibitors of this section intend to band together for mutual protection within their own immediate area and also to aid in every way possible kindred organizations throughout the state and the United States, as well as the main organization which had such a successful session in Cleveland.

"This section of the state is aggressively determined that the exhibitors shall be treated with business-like justice and consideration."

Siberia Wants Films

Official Representative Here in America—After Projection Machines.

The Soviet of the People, as the only stabilized government in Siberia is called, is in the market for several million feet of American films and about 1,000 projection machines.

For this purpose there is now in New York Ivan Golgowski, a member of the Educational Zemstov of the Siberian Government and the accredited representative of the Soviet Republic.

Golgowski is authorized to close deals with any American company or group of individuals who can secure for him the product he wants.

Educational and industrials showing America's development are the types of pictures Golgowski seeks as well as certain brands of western comedies.

The product does not have to be recently made and in fact material that is several years old will get preference.

The Soviet of the People, through its connection with the Russian Co-operative Bureau in Vladivostock has on deposit $6,000,000 in American currency with the Russian Co-operative Unions here in New York against which Golgowski, if he closes the proper sort of a deal, will be authorized to draw.

The Siberian Government plans to conduct an intensive educational campaign among its people of whom there are 18,000,000. Siberia is divided into five distinct provinces, each governed independently but each having its delegates at the council in Vladivostock.

A number of the schools in Siberia at present have projection machines of one type or another already installed. Golgowski, however, will probably close for 500 or 1,000 machines to take back with him.

Golgowski may enter a long term agreement with American film men for a period of 15 or 20 years for exclusive rights to educationals and industrials for Siberia. His initial buy will probably total two or three million feet in the first shipment.

One point which will be insisted upon will be a close arrangement governing the editing of the film. Since there are five provinces a print for each province will have to be made and special attention paid to the general type of production to meet the needs of the country.

Golgowski says that because of the war the fur-bearing animals in Siberia have so developed that there is now on hand an unusual supply of valuable furs which may be exchanged for film.

Can you blame him for being ill? You'll be sick with jealousy when you see all the attention piled on him by the Mack Sennett beauties in his production of "Married Life," a First National attraction in 5 reels.—Advt.

Higham Goes to Washington

Charles Frederick Higham, head of Charles Frederick Higham, Ltd., one of the foremost advertising agencies in England and managing director of Alliance Film Corp., Ltd., went to Washington yesterday in connection with the wire he sent to President Wilson concerning a series of pictures to be written by the President on international peace.

The idea, it is understood, is making progress and according to Leon J. Rubenstein, who introduced Higham to the press here, the latter left for Washington because of information brought to him by Madlaine Traverse, who returned from the Capitol late Wednesday night. Higham will go to Boston from Washington and sail for home from that port.

While in town Washburn will stop at the Biltmore. He sails on the Kroonland on July 10 for Europe, where he will tour England, France and Italy. His foreign trip will last about six or seven weeks and there is a possibility that his first picture under his arrangement with Ochs will be made abroad, since the story is an English one.

Nothing could be learned yesterday regarding the distribution of the Washburn productions.

Films in Britain

ndustry Reviewed by Consul Gen-eral in London—Gives Figures on Exports

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—Consul General Rob-rt P. Skinner writes from London o "Commerce Reports" as follows:

"The motion picture industry, so ar as the United Kingdom is con-erned, looks back on the year 1919 s one of great uneasiness, despite he fact that the business as a whole normously increased in prestige with he public, Parliament, and press.

"The producing and manufactur-ng industry made greater strides, no loubt, than any other section of the rade, and great efforts have been nade to create producing organiza-ions that would supply the British narket with British films and pro-ide serious competition to the American films. Indeed, as is shown elow, the importation of films into Great Britain from other than Amer-can sources is negligible, and today, notwithstanding the intensive adver-ising campaign of British film pro-lucers, the film theaters still exhibit bout 75 per cent of American man-ufacture."

Imported from—	Linear feet 1917	1918	1919
U. S.	68,196,165	44,066,425	81,014,079

Total	78,653,751	53,672,201	92,773,184

Imported from—	Value 1917	1918	1919
U. S.	$3,440,835	$2,321,525	$4,952,660
France	185,355	183,510	338,820
Other c'ntries	125,310	133,280	187,440
Total	$3,751,500	$2,638,315	$5,478,920

"Great activity has been shown by British producers recently, however, and with reasonable success. A number of British films have found their way to the United States, and American theaters are beginning to open their doors to British films. The British manufacturers' most serious trouble at present is that British-made films command, on an average, double the price of American and foreign films. Several American film producers have decided to establish studios in England and manufacture in this market. These studios will be in full working order in the course of 1920.

"As to theaters themselves there was no possibility of building new picture houses during the war or in-creasing the seating capacity of those in existence. At present every effort is being made to construct a large number of theaters, amongst them some planned to accommodate 3,000 or 4,000 people. It is still difficult, however, to secure building mate-rials, as the Government gives pref-erence to the construction of dwell-ings, of which there is a great short-age throughout the country. It is said that the total number of opera-tives in the building trade does not exceed 700,000, as against 820,000 in 1911. With a labor situation of this kind and the need of dwellings as great as it is, obviously builders of theaters will make slow progress for a number of years.

"Within the last year three mem-bers of Parliament have been elected who are in the cinema industry, and there are perhaps half a dozen mem-bers who are interested in this branch of trade. Among the sub-jects which these parliamentary rep-resentatives have under considera-tion are reforms in the cinemato-graph act, incidence of taxation in re-gard to entertainments, and facilities for the construction of new cinemas.

"Export trade, generally, has im-proved now that many markets of the world have become free. In 1919 the exports of British-made films aggregated 30,824,670 linear feet, val-ued at $1,669,520, contrasted with 8,209,257 feet, valued at $560,195, in 1918, and 6,474,215 feet, valued at $454,730, in 1917. Scandinavia, Hol-land, Egypt, and the Far Eastern countries are making inquiries for British films, but the development of this business is checked owing to the lower cost of French, Italian and German productions. French and Italian films, especially, find great favor in Egypt.

"During the current year British producers will continue their efforts to secure their own market and like-wise to increase the demand for Brit-ish films in overseas markets. The improvement made in this country and the progress shown in manufac-turing films are sufficiently note-worthy to indicate that a considera-ble measure of success may be ex-pected."

Censored

Censored, for all extra actors, all yeast and raisins, when they enter the Griffith studios.

The cause for the embargo occurred while more than 200 extras were summoned for some of the scenes in "Way Down East."

The action was laid in a large barn where a country dance is shown. Of course, apple cider and doughnuts were served, and much of the cider disappeared. The next day many of the extras failed to respond to direction. One tried to dance and fell over. "Griff" thought it was the heat until an investigation was made.

It developed that the extras had taken the cider to their dressing rooms, shocked it by adding yeast and raisins, and had a drink as strong as anything 20 years old.

Carewe to Direct Mildred Chaplin

Los Angeles—Edwin Carewe has abandoned the making of his own productions, for the time being at least, and will direct Mildred Harris Chaplin in "Habit," by Thomas Barry.

Carewe's first for Louis Mayer was "Isobel," a James Oliver Curwood story.

Dallas Fitzgerald has been select-ed to direct "Blackmail," Viola Dana's next Metro picture.

Urges Less Producers

Frank Woods Thinks Various Production Elements Should "Stick to the Last"

Independent producers and stars will be interested in learning what Frank E. Woods, supervising direc-tor of Famous Players coast studios, has to say about their activities. Woods says in part:

"It is interesting and in a sense amusing to note the efforts of va-rious elements of the motion picture industry either to attempt the pro-duction of pictures individually or else insist upon an interest in the products of others by reason of their essentially.

"Stars, in many instances, have formed their own companies with va-rious degrees of success; directors have undertaken to become produc-ers; exhibitors have had a try at pro-duction; eminent authors have had their fingers in the pie; business managers have frequently endeavor-ed to go it alone; continuity writers are organizing independently, and are demanding an interest in the produc-tions and will possibly organize to produce for themselves.

"Each of these component parts of the great film producing industry maintains that it is of greater im-portance than the others, when as a matter of fact there is scarcely any diffeernce.

"What does it prove? That, in-dubitably, a complete and compre-hensive organization is essential. That otherwise there is waste, false motion, and lost effort.

"If every unit would admit its own importance but realize that it is val-ueless without the co-operation of all the other units, there would be less time and money wasted on endeav-ors to form rival companies headed by one element or another.

"Better let the men who know the business do the organizing and like the shoemaker, 'stick to your last.'"

Agitation Still On

Over Los Angeles' Treatment Toward Film Folks—Roberts Gives His Ideas

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Apparently the agitation caused by Walter Long's statements that motion picture folk on the coast were discriminated against by merchants here has not ended.

Theodore Roberts, well known character actor, comes to the front in a letter to the press in which he says: "I in common with practically the unanimous voice of the entire moving picture world of Los Angeles indorse him in what he (Long) said."

Roberts' letter says in part:

"I am in position to know rather more of the inside facts of Captain Long's position than any one else and I feel that it is due to Long to raise at least one voice that is entirely and enthusiastically with him.

"I have this to say: It is to be regretted that the statement attributed to Long—inaccurately, I believe—that there is a concerted movement on the part of the moving picture community to defend themselves against the aggressive persecution that is a matter of common knowledge and discussion, is not at present an accomplished fact.

"I believe furthermore that the powers that be in our film world should unite in a testimonial to Capt. Walter Long for the opportunity he has furnished them to exercise Chesterfieldian courtesy in diplomatic denials wherein, if we read carefully and prayerfully between the lines, we shall find the double negative that makes an affirmative.

"And while the Chamber of Commerce and film magnates are bowing and scraping to each other, we of the rank and file collect data.

"And I believe furthermore that a magnificent opportunity is being ignored or overlooked, or between you and me, being fled from with screams of terror, to outline and define a definite and tangible grievance that we as an industry are suffering from and under.

"The voices that I have heard are of those who have climbed out of the highways and byways of our calling and from the heights of wealth, influence and authority to which they have climbed they are rather hazy as to the ruts and mud puddles that are still in our paths. Then again big interests must be served and they hesitate to start anything that they may not wish to finish.

"But I maintain that Captain Long in the main is right, and I know that in his purpose and intention he was entirely and enthusiastically justified, and I, in common with practically the unanimous voice of the entire moving picture world of Los Angeles, his brothers and sisters in the realm of Cinema, indorse him in what he has said."

Sees Four Combines

"The greatly improved quality of independent productions," said W. W. Hodkinson, "is the first sign that things are turning in favor of the exhibitor.

"I believe that the exhibitor should not be required to take the risks of the producer, as he often does today. The producer should pay for his own mistakes.

"Today there are four big combinations that threaten to crush the life of the independent exhibitor.

"Inflation and over-capitalization are a menace to the stability and prosperity of the industry."

One on Bert Adler

Bert Adler was very much surprised to learn yesterday that there are two Keen's Chop Houses in New York.

Bert is selling tickets for the Joe Plunkett dinner to be held tonight and now he wants everyone to know that the dinner will be held at the 44th St. restaurant.

Adler has been living in New York for about 30 years, too.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Marjorie Daw has started a "Don't Ever Marry" movement which has enabled her to break into the front pages of newspapers and is doing its share in the exploitation of the Marshall Neilan picture of that name.

The phrase "Don't Ever Marry" is being given prominence in the stories which advise young girls to join the movement which will insure them domestic bliss. A small wooden rolling pin on which the phrase has been printed has been distributed.

A "No Hats for Summer" club has been started by Colleen Moore, incidentally. She is making her debut under Neilan in Wesley Barry's initial starring vehicle.

Wichita Falls, Tex.—Teaser ads. inserted in local publications, reading "Wanted—A Sinner," by Henry S. Ford, manager of the Majestic, resulted in 400 replies being received. To make the ad look genuine, a newspaper box number for purposes of response was inserted.

Over 400 replies were received and most of the inquiries wanted details as to what it was about. The big advertising splurge just before "In Search of a Sinner" opened its run answered all questions and served to jam the establishment.

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Omaha—Manager Harry Watts of the Strand recently increased the admission prices about 33 1-3% and now he is busy seeing that his patrons get their money's worth. Here is how he built atmosphere for his showing of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde":

The orchestra started into th overture of "William Tell" as th curtain slowly began to rise. Th house grew dark. Real water wa falling on the stage with realistic an wet splashes which gleamed in th faint light cast by street lights. I was a dark alley in London, such one as Mr. Hyde frequented. Light ning flashed and the thunder clat tered and roared.

The bent figure of a man, dresse in a huge robe, sneaked half wa across the street and stopped in th shadow of a pillar while the light ning flashed. He then sneaked to nearby door, chains rattled as he un locked it, and then a light was turn ed on inside the chemist's shop; real chemist shop, too, with testing tubes and other articles which Man ager Watts had much difficulty i getting for the occasion.

The man began mixing the potio which would change him to Dr Jekyll. He opened the small furnac door and the room was flooded wit a brilliant red light. He closed th door, and the light was green. Sud denly, just as he was about to drin the potion, he noticed the windo blind was up. He hurriedly pulle it down.

The screen descended to the stag just as the orchestra was crashin through the last measures of th overture, then the picture began. Th effect was excellent.

Louisville—Col. Fred Levy, presi dent of the First National exchange finds that his clothing establishmen here helps him considerably in hi picture ventures. At his store, th birthday of each youngster who pur chases anything is always recorde and a free ticket to the Strand, goo for himself and a friend, is alway sent on the birthday. It results i helping both his clothing emporiur and the Strand.

VOL. XII No. 79 Saturday, June 19, 1920 Price 5 Cents

15% the Limit

Germany Places Restrictions on Imports of Films from Outside Countries

The German Reichstag has passed a law which limits the importation of all outside films into the German Empire to 15 per cent of the total amount that country uses.

This information is published in copies of some of the leading German trade papers which have just been received in this country by L. Auerbach, of Export and Import Film Co., Inc.

The new law which is designed to supplant the present embargo now in existence in Germany is to become effective October 1. The 15 per cent is to be divided into three classes: 5 per cent to go to the manufacturers, five to the exchanges and five to the exhibitors. The purpose of dividing the total percentage in that manner is to avoid, if possible, an influential manufacturer from tying up all of the foreign film coming into Germany and then exercising a monopoly in the German home trade.

The Teutonic trade papers further state that this 15 per cent is to include the total importations from all countries outside of Germany. It is therefore apparent that this country will be able to export only a small part of its product to Germany since England, France and Italy and other countries figure in on the new German act.

Alliance May Form Own Distributing Company—After American Films for Europe

Further indications of the plans of the Alliance Film Corp., Ltd., the $5,000,000 English company of which Sir Walter De Freece is chairman of the board of directors and Charles Frederick Higham, managing director, was made yesterday in a statement issued by Gustavus A. Rogers, of Rogers and Rogers, attorneys in America for Alliance.

Mr. Rogers hints that the plans of Alliance contemplate American exchanges or alliances with other American producing and distributing companies, or possibly an American corporation acting independently of or subsidiary to the British corporation.

Laboratory Owners Turn Down Union Wage Scale at Meeting Held Thursday Night

It was learned yesterday that at the meeting held Thursday night in the rooms of the National Association the demands made by the new union of laboratory workers, the Motion Picture Craftsmen, were rejected.

At the meeting were present either the owners or representatives of the 15 odd laboratories scattered around New York whose weekly capacity is said to total 10,000,000 ft.

No one at the National Association who could be reached cared to comment on the situation. The M. P. Craftsmen are allied with the International Alliance of Theatrical and Stage Employees, but no one at the I. A. T. S. E. could be reached yesterday to ascertain what the union would now do since its demands were rejected.

The three theaters are the Cherokee, the Royal and the Arco, and the airdomes are the Rex, the Russell and the Compton. The corporation, it is stated, took possession of the theaters on March 20 under its contract.

It is alleged that the Koplars have failed to carry out their portion of the contract and have interfered with the corporation in its occupation and control of the houses. The court is asked to prevent further interference.

The corporation alleges that it has made payments of $100,000 on the purchase price thus far and has paid bills and other obligations. The corporation had previously filed suit to restrain the Koplars from interfering with the management of some of the theater properties.

Anything for Money

The following four line want ad appeared in the classified columns of a morning newspaper yesterday:

"Man wanted to ride over Niagara Falls in a houseboat for motion picture film; bona fide offer; $1,000 for 5 minutes work. Apply R. A. Walsh, 1465 Broadway."

The above resulted in about 150 applicants at the Mayflower offices yesterday morning, all eager for the $1,000. Mayflower says Walsh really intends shooting such a scene.

Anyway, it would seem that the particular newspaper is right when it says its "our want ads are read."

Say Long Is Wrong

Los Angeles Exhibitors' Association Defines Stand

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—The local exhibitors' association has adopted a resolution designed to define its attitude on the allegations made by Walter Long in reference to the way film folks are treated by Los Angeles.

The association takes issue with Long's claims as expressed in the following resolution:

"Whereas, Walter Long, a motion picture actor, purporting to speak in behalf of the entire motion picture industry, has made certain hostile remarks regarding the people and administrative bodies of the City of Los Angeles, and

"Whereas, We, the Theater Owners' Association of Los Angeles hereby emphatically wish it made known that we feel and always have felt that the citizens and administrative bodies of the City of Los Angeles are and always have been more than fair to the industry in general.

"Be it hereby Resolved, That we wish it made public that the individual instances presented by Walter Long against the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, the citizens and administrative bodies of Los Angeles, do not represent the feelings of this organization in any respect; and in proof of our sincerity we stand ready, as always in the past, to lend our stages and screens to any worthy cause that may be for the betterment of the great city of Los Angeles, or our Government.

"ABE GORE,
"Executive Board.
"H. M. BOSLEY,
"Vice-President."

Jack Callicot, managing director of the Kinema Theater, said the resolution represents the feeling of the majority of theater owners in the city. He declared they wished to be excluded from any row between the producers and artists, and said if a conflict must come the owners would side with the citizens of the city.

Cohen Refuses Offer

Turns Down Salary of $25,000 Yearly from Exhibitors' Association —Sum Goes Into Treasury

One of the final actions taken by the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America at the close of the Cleveland convention last week was to pass a resolution fixing the salary of the national president of the organization at $25,000 per year.

When Sydney Cohen, the president, was informed of the committee's action, he said:

"I cannot see my way clear to accept the salary which the organization so generously has tendered to me. The Motion Picture Theater Owners of America has just been born. It will need a great deal of care and above all things it will need funds.

"Under these circumstances, I think it is my plain duty to decline the salary and to ask the committee to devote the money to organization purposes."

contracting for foreign rights of American made pictures, not only for distribution in Great Britain but throughout the European countries. The company will form a special organization for the handling of the foreign rights of American made films. With respect to this feature, Rogers states that he will be prepared to have a more definite and concrete statement in the future.

The present contract with the Associated First National Exhibitors, according to Rogers, is for a limited number of productions extending over a period of about a year, but in addition to the pictures to be released through First National, Alliance Film will, either through its American corporation or through its British companies, issue other pictures, in one of which, it is said, some of the nobility of Great Britain of international fame and reputation will appear.

Talking Films

Predicted by Frenchman, According to "Times" Cable

Perfect synchronism of films and speech is predicted by a French professor in a special copyrighted cable sent to the New York Times from Paris.

The cable follows:

"Out of the void into every moving picture theater, synchronized with all the movements shown on the film, will come in the near future the voices of the actors as they play their parts. Such is the dream of Prof. Edouard Branly, expert on wireless telephony.

"The success of the concert given by Mme. Melba at Chelmsford, England, to all the wireless telephone listeners in London, Paris, Berlin, Rome and Christiana is his text. Soon, he declares, every one will be able to stay at home and hear any concert he wishes, and for all the movies one orchestra will be sufficient.

"He even goes further. Groups of motion picture theaters, he declares, will throw the same film on the screen at the same instant, while the actors will speak their parts into wireless telephone instruments. With the human voice and by watching the film they can secure the synchronization which is impossible with the talking machine, and in the days to come the movies will become the serious rivals of the theater.

"The only difficulty foreseen seems to be the breaking of the film while the voices go on without action."

Splendid Production and Story With Genuine Appeal

Herbert Rawlinson in
"PASSERS BY"
Blackton Prod.-Pathe

DIRECTOR .....J. Stuart Blackton
AUTHOR .....C. Haddon Chambers
SCENARIO BY ..... Stanley Olmsted
CAMERAMAN ..... William S. Adams
AS A WHOLE.....Realistic atmosphere and some splendid character studies its attractive features.
STORY.....Not always plausible but has wonderful characterizations.
DIRECTION.....Highly artistic; London fog and street scenes thoroughly realistic.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Proper
CAMERA WORK .....Satisfactory
STAR.....Pleasing in his part but really hasn't stellar prominence.
SUPPORT.....Tom Lewis and Dick Lee share alike in very fine character parts; others good.
EXTERIORS ..... Splendid
INTERIORS ..... Adequate
DETAIL.....Well taken care of
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Wealthy man who entertains the passers by and finds among them his lost love.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,798 feet

In all probability the fact that the author has not stuck rigidly to plausibility and the fact that he resorts to slightly improbable means in presenting various of his characters, will be promptly lost sight of in the production given C. Hadden Chambers' stage success. Surely J. Stuart Blackton has provided it with a thoroughly realistic and carefully laid atmosphere.

The London fog scenes are splendid. Many of the exterior backgrounds are comprised of the Blackton process of photographing pastel drawings. This methd is very effective and is advantageously used in "Passers By" in view of the hazy appearance which represents the London atmosphere. Detail has been carefully attended to throughout and the various street scenes representative of London's poorer section are very fine.

"Passers By" won considerable favor as a sage success and has a goodly share of human appeal for a screen vehicle. Outside of the fact that the hero loses the girl he loves and finds her again near the close of he picture, there isn't much story. The remainder of the picture is filled with incidents not directly bearing nor closely allied with the slight plot. However, in padding out by means of the appearance of the passers by they afford a fair amount of amusement. W. J. Ferguson in his own inimitable way, portrays Pinc, the butler, while Tom Lewis as "Nighty," the cabby, and Dick Lee as a derelict present pleasing character bits.

Fearing an affair between her step-brother and a governess in the house, Lady Hurley orders the girl away, thereby furthering her plans of a match between Peter and Beatrice Dainton. Peter searches in vain for Margaret, the governess, with whom he was really in love. In the meantime Margaret is prevented from taking her own life by "Nighty."

Her efforts to communicate with Peter are fruitless, the letters being intercepted by Lady Hurley. So Peter never knew about Peter, Jr. Six years pass and Peter is engaged to Beatrice. One stormy night he decides to throw his house open to "The Passers By." Here they introduce "Nighty" and Burns, the derelict, among the passers. It happens that Margaret, now working to provide for her child, is caught in the storm and chances by Peter's home, where she is taken in by Peter himself.

Finally Peter breaks off his engagement and there is a happy reunion. Little Charles Stuart Blackton, as the child, is pleasing indeed. Others in the cast are Leila Valentine, Ellen Cassity, Pauline Coffyn.

Properly Exploited This Should Make Money

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors should have no trouble in making this one go over big for many reasons. It's a Blackton porduction. Herbert Rawlinson heads the cast. The title is familiar because of its success as a stage play, popular both in London and New York. C. Haddon Chambers is the author. With these facts alone you have plenty of exploitation material. Added Commodore Blackton's splendid presentation of it you should have little difficulty in securing box office results of a very satisfactory nature.

Play up the human appeal angle. To attract attention you might have large signs painted reading: "YOU, THE PASSERS BY, come in and see other 'Passers By,' a Stuart Blackton production of the well known stage play." Or, "He found his lost sweetheart among those who passed by." "Ever hear of 'Nighty'? Know who he was? See for yourself at the.....theater."

Thousands Of Profitable Theatres Have Been Made By These Able Producers

The seven producers who have bound themselves together in their own organization to market their own productions without middlemen have been—last year, this year and for many years—makers of the biggest and best in motion pictures. They have been the chief agencies in the making of those great pictures on which shrewd and skilled exhibitor-showmen have built great theatre institutions.

Exhibitors are prompt to uphold the tremendous mastery of Thomas H. Ince; the true, genuine values of his pictures; their great hold upon the public.

Exhibitors themselves are the first to emphasize the unparalleled uniqueness of Mack Sennett—that brilliant artist-business man who fans the laughter of the world into box-office profits

Exhibitors themselves hail Marshall Neilan, with his tremendous dynamic "punch" of young manhood; with his Irish tenderness and romance, catching and picturing on the screen the eternal heart of youth.

Exhibitors are first to remember and talk about the wistfulness of an old-time "Fifty-Fifty" and to praise the glowing romance and thrilling power of the present day Allan Dwan.

Exhibitors themselves have a place alone from all others for George Loane Tucker, maker of the mightiest of all productions—"The Miracle Man." The heart that was put into that unrivalled picture will be put into others of equal power and profit.

Exhibitors themselves tell you that in all the world of picture making there is one—and just one—Maurice Tourneur, with a rattling, imaginative, conception of action, colour, romance—of stories that stir the blood.

Exhibitors take pride in the rapidity of development of J. Parker Read, Jr., grown to power and position in a hard-to-conquer industry by his bold imagination and his flair for showmanship values on the screen.

These seven producers in the year from Sunday, September 12th, are releasing to you a minimum of thirty productions under the most flexible and likeable sales policy ever devised in this industry. Their productions will stand alone—you may buy those of any one, two or three producers, or you may have them all with the vast sense of protection and profit that they will afford you.

Wanda Hawley's First Starring Vehicle Is Delightful Comedy

Wanda Hawley in
"MISS HOBBS"
Realart

DIRECTOR .....Donald Crisp
AUTHOR ..... Jerome K. Jerome
SCENARIO BY .....Elmer Harris
CAMERAMAN .....C. Edgar Schoenbaum
AS A WHOLE.....Very delightful light comedy given novel production—star pleases and is given fine support.
STORY.....Good comedy containing a lot of popular satire.
DIRECTION.....Most creditable; gets in a lot of good comedy touches and keeps action going at very interesting pace.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Unusual
CAMERA WORK ..... Fine
STAR.....Gets over nicely in light comedy character role.
SUPPORT.....Splendid; headed by Harrison Ford
EXTERIORS ..... Delightful
INTERIORS ..... Novel and amusing
DETAIL.....Lots of fine comedy touches in this CHARACTER OF STORY....How man wins heart of man-hater by arousing her pity.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,471 feet

Wanda Hawley's first starring vehicle is a delightful light comedy, given a novel, artistic and even amusing production and receiving the benefit of some sterling supporting performances including one from that always dependable prop of stars, Harrison Ford. The comedy is brisk and there is no time wasted getting into it, there is a notable vein of popular satire and this has been brought on the screen in all its rich humor. The situations follow one another in rapid succession and there is not the slightest let down throughout the action.

All of which is praise of considerable height. So many intended comedies find their way to the screen, comedies that bid too strenuously for laughs or, having achieved them in one sequence, lie down and die a monotonous death in the sequence immediately following, that "Miss Hobbs" can be ranked with the best on the market.

Director Donald Crisp has made the most of his opportunities in this. He has developed the comedy situations with a fine sense of humor and has also knuckled down to the little details that mean so much in a picture of this type. "Miss Hobbs" puts an audience on a grand feeling of intimacy with it and when a comedy does this success is not far in the offing.

Miss Hobbs (Wanda Hawley) is a faddist in art and a man hater. Her house demonstrates to what amusing ends she goes to in the first line and her attitude toward the male has nothing of uncertainty about it. So severe is she in her preachings to her friends that she easily induces Beulah Hackett to give up her husband and Millicent Farey to give up her fiance. Both go to live with Miss Hobbs.

The main comedy line of action starts when Wolff-Kingsearl decides to win Miss Hobbs by playing on her sympathies, knowing full well that "pity is akin to love." How he triumphs is told in a series of very amusing situations, often punctuated by the more boisterous humor of Beulah and Millicent and their respective men.

Miss Hawley is a very pretty sight as Miss Hobbs and her characterization of the role is amusing. Harrison Ford, a staunch prop for any feminine star, gets into the role of Kingsearl in fine shape. Helen Jerome Eddy, Jack Mulhall, Julianne Johnson and Walter Hiers are a funny quartette, while Emily Chichester and Frances Raymond also render good performances.

Introducing New Star Offers You Advertising Opportunity

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There may be some who doubt the starring strength of Wanda Hawley, but certainly with all the assisting forces she has in this, her first appearance in the role of honor, she succeeds in making just as good if not a better impression than that created by nine out of ten of the present day luminaries. She has youth and beauty to her credit and while not blessed with an outstanding personality, she possesses nevertheless an ability to act and a knowledge of comedy values.

If you have played the pictures in which she has appeared opposite various of the Paramount stars she certainly ought to draw for you in this. Make an event of it and go a little heavy on the advertising. There are unique ways of introducing a new star to your public that could be applied here. Use the method of the producers in introducing her to the trade. After you get them coming "Miss Hobbs" will surely fill the bill as a fine piece of comedy entertainment.

AUTHORS....Carey Wilson and Edmund Goulding
SCENARIO BY .....Violet Clark
CAMERAMAN .....A. A. Cadwell
AS A WHOLE.....Good, big production values and generally capable performances get the better of very unconvincing story.
STORY.....Mostly very unreal—idea of having modern story told by ancient Roman soothsayer all wrong.
DIRECTION.....Many scenes handled in very big way, Roman stuff registers and cabaret shots are spectaular and real.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Aims to prove that civilization that degrades women cannot exist
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 7,300 feet

This is one of those "yes and no" pictures. You can easily sit down and rip the whole story to shreds from start to finish, prove the drama utterly unconvincing and the characters altogether unreal. And then you can throw your frame of mind into reverse and dwell on the extravagant production values with which the picture is endowed and prove that its spectacular interes will captivate the audiences. After the shouting is all over and the dust has cleared away, you come to the conclusion that the latter argument gets a shade the better of it. As a states rights production "Madonnas and Men" (whatever that may mean) succeeds in crossing the line a winner.

The picture crashes into being in ancient Rome and shows a big stadium scene wherein the emperor is working himself into an ecstasy over the contemplated chewing up of a Christian girl by a lion. His appetite is well whetted as he has already seen one gladiator plunge his sworn into another while his favorite dancer has displayed some fancy steps in the resulting blood.

The soothsayer gets the ear of the emperor's son and tells him that women should be honored and not thrown to the lions. He relates a story of which he has had a vision, laid in this modern day. The story tells of the manner in which a capitalist kidnapped the daughter of the woman who jilted him in the long ago, how he contemplated marrying her and committing her to a loveless life even as her mother had committed him, and how he was found on the moment of the wedding by the frenzied father of the girl. The villain kills the father and then dies of blood pressure.

The son of the capitalist, after having had a turmoil of a time with a roof garden vamp who was crazy over him, takes the bewildered little girl in his arms. After hearing this story the emperor's son plunges into the arena and saves the Christian girl. The emperor dies of a fit and the son is crowned his successor.

Of course it is all very unconvincing that the Roman soothsayer should know all about Nebraska, automobiles, the midnight roof revelries, stage door Johnnies and the like. And the parallel between the Roman emperor and the Christian girl, and the modern capitalist and the daughter of his old sweetheart is in no way convincing.

Many of the characters of the modern story are also quite unreal, but the fine performances manage to inject a note of sincerity into the picture.

And the modern story has the benefit of some extravagantly staged midnight roof garden scenes, a generally lavish production and a startling sensational bit in which Miss E.-B. Fontaine undresses to the flesh behind a very thin screen.

Ought to Make Money on a State Rights Circuit

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The production of this is likely to put it over as a big sensational hit with many audiences, particularly those catered to via the state rights market. The unconvincing quality of the story is obviated by a gorgeous production, some good vamping bits, including the undressing episode, and some quite irrelevant comedy bits in which Faire Binney is the pivotal character.

In presenting it the best way is to lay stress on the big production values, billing them much in the manner of the circus press agent. "See the lustful orgy of the Roman Emperor, the startling scenes at the Midnight Revels, see Evan-Burrows Fontaine, noted dancer, see a stirring story of today that has its source in the ruins of ancient Rome," is a line of talk that should furnish an advertising cue.

Thrilling Finish Puts Latest Fairbanks Over

Douglas Fairbanks in
"THE MOLLYCODDLE"
United Artists Corp.

DIRECTOR ..... Victor Fleming
AUTHOR ..... Harold MacGrath
SCENARIO BY..... Tom Geraghty
CAMERAMAN .....Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Avalanche scenes and thrilling fight sequence at end put over very weak Fairbanks production.
STORY.....Doesn't provide the usual Fairbanks opportunities and drifts along quite a while without supplying laughs, thrills or much interest.
DIRECTION.....Avalanche and fight scenes finely staged.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Unusually good
LIGHTINGS ..... Fine
CAMERA WORK .....Very good
STAR.....Appears in different sort of character but doesn't come through with brand of stuff people expect, until finish.
SUPPORT ..... Satisfactory
EXTERIORS.....Some wonderful shots of Hopi Indian reservation.
INTERIORS ..... Adequate
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY.....American, reared in England, becomes re-nationalized on return to Arizona.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,800 feet

After all is said and done Douglas Fairbanks only requires plot enough in his pictures to link his various stunts together. When the plot goes beyond this and threatens to relegate Fairbanks to the position of a conservative leading man, the effect on the spectator is liable to be rather depressing. This is the trouble with "The Mollycoddle" over considerable of its length. Not until the end does Fairbanks show his wonderful athletic form and his ability to build up a rapid succession of thrills.

Most of the time he is content to have fun poked at his character because of its characteristics of the mollycoddle. He relies on subtitles for humor and on his own unusual appearance. Unusual because of moustache, monocle, cane, spats and whatnot. To be sure there is a flash here and there of the typical Fairbanks humor. The best is the scene in which he, after falling out of a catch of fresh fish, walks along the street and is followed by a number of expectant cats. This isn't a laugh, it's a roar.

Fairbanks appears as Richard Marshall, an American reared in England, who meets other Americans at Monte Carlo who are disgusted with his various affectations. He is shanghaied aboard the yacht of Van Holkar, a diamond smuggler who is playing host to the other Americans to hide his trade. The bits of the star wallowing in the stoker's hole are not funny in the popular sense of the word.

The party eventually lands in Arizona. Van Holkar attempts to do away with all the party but the girl by blasting the top of a mountain and creating a landslide down on a Hopi Indian village. Here are real thrills galore. The scenes are admirably handled and the entire cliff village is seen in the sensational process of destruction. The action picks up further during Marshall's whirlwind fight with Van Holkar, during which they fall through the branches of a tree, roll down a mountain side and plunge into the rapids of a river. The villain out of the way Marshall claims the girl who, by the way, is a Secret Service agent, and the picture is over.

Final Sequences Will Make Big Hit With All Crowds

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Despite the fact that "The Mollycoddle" doesn't hit the typical Fairbanks stride until close to the end, it attains such a fine and thrilling pace at this point that the crowds will likely congratulate the star on producing another winner. Certainly these last two sequences come up to anything that could possibly be expected of the star and completely put to rout the rather tiresome impression created by the early scenes.

The scenes which were taken on the Hopi Indian reservation have received considerable publicity recently and these should be mentioned in advertising the production. Also feature the avalanche and mention that it dstroys the entire Indian village. This is perhaps the first time that such a scene has been pictured and it ought to go over big. The string of fight scenes should be featured also. The dangers that the two men take are obvious and will certainly "get" the crowds.

Good Production and Some Thrills to Rather Familiar Story Material

"OUT OF THE STORM"

Eminent Authors Prod.—Goldwyn

DIRECTOR ..... William Parke
AUTHOR ..... Gertude Atherton
SCENARIO BY .....J. E. Nash
CAMERAMAN .....Andre Barlatier
AS A WHOLE.....Moves along at good pace; well made production but doesn't contain anything new for picture patrons.
STORY.....Adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's "The Tower of Ivory"; same plot has been done many times before.
DIRECTION.....Furnishes some fair thrills in the wreck scene; generally very well handled.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Always clear
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
PLAYERS.....Well known and capable cast
EXTERIORS ..... Adequate
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL ..... No very noticeable errors
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Girl who is willing to give up lover and marry the man who has made her career possible.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,146 feet

The producers haven't spared efforts in giving a satisfactory production to their adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's well known novel, "The Tower of Ivory." Also they are to be congratulated on their choice of title which at least has some bearing on the story. A well selected cast headed by Barbara Castleton, Sydney Ainsworth and John Bowers give pleasing performances. Some folks may resent the fact that Lawson Butt was handed such a meagre role. He only appears in two or three scenes. It would seem that his ability is deserving of more consideration.

Director Parke has seen to it that the action moves along at a good pace and there are some lively moments—a shipwreck and a convict's escape—that will go long way toward putting the picture over. The story itself, the same old eternal triangle, doesn't contain anything very new to photoplay patrons. They have seen the same plot time and again the woman who would marry a man out of gratitude, thereby sacrificing her love for another.

The best thing about "Out of the Storm" is the fact that it keeps moving and the action is never allowed to drag. This compensates in a goodly measure and then too the thrill furnished by the shipwreck will have the desired results. It is very realistic and exciting while it lasts. Also, the escape of Ainsworth as the convict, while improbable, works up a degree of suspense. The writer of the scenario has developed things in a backwards sort of fashion at times, having events happen and explaining afterwards, but it doesn't seem to deteriorate its logic any.

Al Levering takes Margaret Hill from a notorious dive and through his efforts she becomes a singer. Just as she is about to join an opera company Levering confesses to Margaret that the money which afforded her musical education was stolen by him and that he has been convicted to a term in prison. Levering admits his love for Margaret and asks her to wait for him. She promises.

Aboard ship Margaret is seen by John Ordham, brother of Lord Bridgeminster and heir to the title. Ordham is struck by the singer's appearance but does not make her acquaintance until the ship is wrecked and he saves her life. They are picked up by different boats and lose track of each other. Five years pass. Margaret becomes a famous singer. Ordham becomes engaged to Mabel Cutting. At the opera he sees Margaret and later visits her. He breaks his engagement and they plan to marry.

In the meantime Levering escapes from prison and arrives at Margaret's home. Out of gratitude Margaret agrees to marry him and sends Ordham away. The officials track down Levering and he is killed trying to escape, leaving Margaret and Ordham to each other.

Talk About the Spectacular Shipwreck and Prisoner's Escape

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You have plenty of aids in this one to cover up the rather trite plot. There's the name of Gertrude Atherton and the fact that "Out of the Storm" is an adaptation of her well known novel, "The Tower of Ivory." Mention this fact for the benefit of the bookworms who like to see the picturizations of novels they read. You have a long list of well known players consisting of such favorites as John Bowers, Barbara Castleton, Lawson Butt, Sydney Ainsworth, and others, to work with. Play up the shipwreck and the spectacular escape at night of the convict. These two sequences are really good.

Catch lines could be used effectively along the lines of: "Out of the storm came ???? See for yourself in Goldwyn's adaptation of the Gertrude Atherton novel." Or if you want to hint at the nature of the story say: "Which one should she marry? The man who had made possible her success as a singer or the man who had saved her life and whom she loved? See what came 'Out of the Storm.'"

Spicey But Slim Comedy Made Constantly Amusing By Stars' Work

Douglas MacLean and Doris May in
"LET'S BE FASHIONABLE"
Ince—Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Lloyd Ingraham
AUTHOR ..... Mildred Considine
SCENARIO BY .....Luther Reed
CAMERAMAN .....Bert Cann
AS A WHOLE.....Very amusing farce with considerable appeal for metropolitan audiences
STORY.....Gets a little far-fetched even for farce at times but registers many rattling good comedy sequences.
DIRECTION.....Very capable and appreciative
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Very good
CAMERA WORK ..... Very good
STARS.....Get a lot of good comedy over as young married couple.
SUPPORT ..... Satisfactory
EXTERIORS ..... Very nice
INTERIORS ..... Adequate
DETAIL.....Stars register many good side points through expressions.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Predicament of loving couple in suburban community where it isn't fashionable to observe ordinary conventions.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,510 feet

A very amusing farce idea is the basis of "Let's Be Fashionable." It has been dressed up with a technically nice Ince production, contains a lot of pleasing exteriors, and has the benefit of very sincere and effective performances rendered by Douglas MacLean and Doris May. The rather blase character of the plot idea may serve to restrict the picture's appeal to metropolitan audiences, but at the same time they have handled the material in a conservative and proper manner.

A good many fine comedy sequences are unfolded and the situations in which the young married couple are precipitated are sure-fire farce comedy. The stars register a lot of good comedy business through their very clever individual work and build up scenes by means of clever and effective use of facial expression.

The Langdons, Henry and Evelyn, are the latest members of a fashionable suburban colony where it isn't considered good form for a husband to be seen in the company of his wife and vice versa. In fact, it is the thing in the colony for all married people to have a harmless affair with an affinity.

Deeply in love with one another the Langdons find themselves snubbed for this very reason. And so they decide to step into line with the rest of the colony's inhabitants. The comedy thereafter is naturally very broad farce, but it is handled with fine comedy sense and never allowed to overreach the bounds of respectability even though plausibility is outraged again and again throughout.

The plot may be a little slight, but they have built it up cleverly in the production and this value, together with the stars' performances, make for a continuous piece of comedy entertainment.

In support of the starring team appear Wade Botteler, Grace Morse, George Webb, Molly McConnell and Norris Johnson, all of whom do what is required of them satisfactorily enough.

With But Few Exceptions This Ought to Register Big

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is probable that the well known family exhibitor, that is the exhibitor who caters to conservative family elements, will find some among his audiences kicking at the general tone of this picture. With these few dissenting votes accounted for, it may safely be said that "Let's Be Fashionable" will sweep on to the same popularity that has greeted the other MacLean-May releases, popularity so firmly established by their first great success, "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave."

The story gives you ample opportunity to put a little spice and pep into your advertising of the picture. Such catch lines as "To be fashionable the Langdons, young and very much in love, found that they required a little scandal in the family! But scandal is hard to get when you don't want it," "There are some quarters where it isn't considered fashionable for a husband to be in love with his wife or vice versa! And Henry and Evelyn Langdon wanted to be in the midst of the social swim. But they were in love. See—," may answer the purpose.

Gives the stars a good play and mention their previous successes. You might also find that the name of Luther Reed, the scenarist, is of benefit in the advertising considering the various successes he has had. And don't forget the name of Ince and the guarantee of production that it stands for.

Not the Best Story for Jack Pickford but has been Well Produced

Jack Pickford in
"DOUBLE-DYED DECEIVER"
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR ..... Al. Green
AUTHOR ..... O. Henry
SCENARIO BY .....Edward T. Lowe, Jr.
CAMERAMAN .....C. R. Cook
AS A WHOLE.....Carefully produced but not suited to the personality of the star; drags badly at times.
STORY.....Not entirely convincing but follows logical sequence even though it has implausibilities.
DIRECTION .....Does much to make the picture get over as well as it does.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very fine
LIGHTINGS ..... Good
CAMERA WORK ..... Splendid
STAR .....His personality pleasing as ever
SUPPORT ..... Adequate
EXTERIORS .....Some beautiful shots
INTERIORS ..... Real
DETAIL .....Too much of it
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Texas "bad boy" reforms through mother love he had never known.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,876 feet

As in previous Jack Pickford releases, "Double-Dyed Deceiver" maintains the same standard of production, an unstinted and almost lavish production as far as providing an atmosphere is concerned. The story requires a South American locale and the mansion, gardens and drives certainly bear out the intention. The photography, as usual, is the best.

But there is something about "Double-Dyed Deceiver" that isn't just right. And it's the fact that the story doesn't suit the personality of Jack Pickford. Once fans have seen him in such pictures as "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and "Huckleberry Finn," roles of the country boy type, it's just a little difficult to imagine Jack as a "gun fightin' kid." Of course he reforms and becomes a regular prodigal son with a little romance to finish it up, but it's a bet that the majority of folks will want the romance earlier.

Detail is laid on a trifle too thick at times causing the action to drag. O. Henry has endeavored to show what mother love can do and in his character of the "Llando Kid" he aims to impress that no matter how bad a man may seem, there is always his better self which can be brought out. In this instance he shows how the Texas "bad boy" became a loving son by means of a mother love that he had never known.

The star is ably supported by a well chosen cast. Sydney Ainsworth is the villainous character, while James Neill and Edythe Chapman portray the father and mother who believe the Llando Kid to be their lost son. Marie Dunn plays opposite the star.

In order to escape trial by jury for the killing of a young gambler in Texas, the Llando Kid flees to South America where he goes to the American Consul, Thacker, who notices a resemblance between the Kid and the long lost son of Senor and Senora Urique. He sees in the resemblance a scheme to further his plans to secure some of the Senor's wealth.

Thacker takes the Kid into his confidence and they start the project. The Uriques are overwhelmed to find their son and he is installed in their beautiful home. But instead of carrying out his plan the Kid is reformed by the affection and devotion of the happy mother, and when it comes time to loot the safe he backs out. Then too he has fallen in love with Estelle. He confesses to her but she forgives him and he remains the son of Senor and Senora Urique. Thacker is silenced by the Kid's threat to kill him if he squeals.

Link Up the Names of the Star and Author in Exploitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a Jack Pickford production and an O. Henry story. In these two facts you have your best working material. While it is more likely that the majority of the star's admirers prefer him in a different type of role, there may be those who will like him as well as a "gun fighter." Certainly everyone will be satisfied with the production given O. Henry's story of the Texas "bad boy" who was reformed by the love of a mother.

Use the star's name in the largest type, but for those who have read the O. Henry story perhaps you had better link up the title as well. Catch lines could read: "Music will tame wild beasts and kindness can reform bad men. See how 'The Double-Dyed Deceiver' reforms. Jack Pickford's latest picture is a story of a deception that lead to his reformation. See it at the .....theater."

"THE CHEATER"
Screen Classics-Metro

DIRECTOR ..... Henry Otto
AUTHOR .....Henry Arthur Jones
SCENARIO BY .....Lois Zellner
CAMERAMAN .....W. M. Edmond
AS A WHOLE.....Satisfying offering that holds the attention fairly well; not unusual but will please "fan" audiences especially.
STORY.....Not unlike "The Miracle Man" in theme; improbable, perhaps, but contains screen ingredients.
DIRECTION.....Has handled material very well
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Clear
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
STAR.....Convincing in the role of "The Cheater"; some pretty close-ups of her.
SUPPORT.....Very much subordinated to allow the star every opportunity.
EXTERIORS.....Many beautiful scenes
INTERIORS.....Look like the real thing
DETAIL .....Nothing very wrong
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Professional fakers at work with the regeneration of one.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,500 feet

Except that's in this case it's a "miracle girl," there isn't a great deal of difference in the themes of "The Cheater" and "The Miracle Man." Henry Arthur Jones has developed the same idea, that of faith as a power to heal, bringing it about through the medium of a professional faker who is later regenerated through the love of the one she is deceiving.

Despite the similarity there is enough distinction about "The Cheater" to get it by on its own merit. The story is interesting in its way and it has been given a thoroughly adequate production. The director has maintained an even interest throughout and displayed considerable ingenuity in several instances.

"The Cheater" does not contain the pathos of "The Miracle Man" nor is the biggest play made upon the "faith as a healer" idea. On the contrary, they have elaborated on the trickery of the "work dodgers" and delved into the workings of their trade. Much amusement is afforded in the various disclosures of these frauds.

One scene particularly showing how wealthy women pay enormous fees for a peep into the future, has been well done. The lady is requested to place her handbag on the chair beside her and while the medium gazes into the crystal his accomplices take the bag, note its contents on a blackboard, replace the bag and then place the board in a position to be seen by the medium but not by the lady in search of her future. In this way he tells her various marvelous things about herself.

Of course there will be those for whom this will have little appeal because of its improbabilities, but for the average photoplay audience it will in all likelihood be favorably received. The fact that the girl reforms and marries the man she has been deceiving is not a probable ending, but it is the ending that will meet with the public's approval, which is all that is necessary after all.

After fleecing the guests at a fashionble health resort, Lily Meany (May Allison) and her father set up a new project. Lily becomes Vashti, the healer, and professes that by her purity and fasting she has the power to cure the ills of the wealthy. Upon the recommendation of Mrs. Prall, who claims Vashti cured her, the girl goes to the home of Lord Asgarby to cure his invalid little sister.

The child begins to improve, but Vashti's fraud is suspected by the family doctor, who watches her closely. Finally, when she finds herself in love with Lord Asgarby, Vashti confesses but is forgiven. The child is miraculously cured and Vashti and the Lord are married.

Has A Variety Of Appeal. Should Be A Good Box Office Attraction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Despite its similarity to the well known "Miracle Man," Metro's adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' "Judah," should have no difficulty in going over satisfactorily on its own merits. It has been given a splendid and careful production, is well directed and the cast is a good one. The star is well suited to the part, although she may furnish a shock or two by the manner in which she gets away with many cigarettes and a few poses showing her much at ease with her feet up on a table. There will also be those who won't obect to this.

If you care to make a point of the power of faith to heal, this should attract a certain crowd. Again you can appeal to still another class by sticking to "The Cheater" idea. Ask them if they know the inside workings of professional fakers. Promise them some startling disclosures of their tricks. It should get them. Or say, "She cheated the man she loved. Did he forgive her? See for yourself in 'The Cheater' at the———theater."

Go to your window and watch the passers by.
What do you see?
Just men and women dressed more or less to a common plan?

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Predicament of a young man with plenty of creditors and no money.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,608 feet

This picture doesn't contain the necessary vital spark of comedy to register it a success. They haven't gone about producing it in the right way. In the first place they have neglected to center on a main line of action. The scenes herein skip from one line to another and in this way the interest is lost. What there is of real plot fails to put in an appearance until the third reel and even then it isn't briskly developed.

Lack of proper comedy tempo is another fault. Comedy of the type they were striving for here needs a very rapid tempo. Instead there is clowning galore. The star is catered to in almost every scene and he doesn't show much. He stands around with a pair of overalls hanging on him by one strap and seems to strive for his comedy by waving his arms about in a ludicrous fashion. Really it looks as if Owen Moore had just been too lazy to get up and do something in his role in this.

This profuse catering to the star seems to be a common fault in all the Owen Moore pictures. The producers don't seem to realize that they should strive to make him the exponent of their comedy instead of endeavoring to make himself the comedy.

They get a few laughs after the characters have been planted by showing Moore in a scene with a flivver that won't stand still and let him fix it. But this spot is followed along by some pretty tedious action that registers little of anything. They eventually get down to putting Moore in a predicament where he is forced to work as hired man for a political boss who is blocking him in his effort to dispose of an oil well.

They start into this situation in a promising way, but suddenly decide to clown around some more and there is a full reel in which the plot stands still. Nor does it ultimately wind up with any brisk concluding sequence. The father of the heroine comes to Moore to tell him that he will take him in his firm as partner and also give his consent to the marriage. The villain tries to queer him by bringing in a vamp who claims him as the father of four children, but the effort falls a failure even as does this final desperate attempt for laughs.

Moore is supported by Gloria Hope, Emmett King, Henry Miller, Jr., Charles Arling, Nell Craig, Arthur Hoyt and Virginia Caldwell, who seem at times to be quite at sea in endeavoring to interpret their roles.

You Might Chance It On This If Star Has Following

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is true that this contains some laughs and it may register after an average fashion with those fans who appreciate Owen Moores work. Before audiences where he doesn't boast of any more than average popularity the stuff in this is going to have a pretty hard time getting over.

If you think, however, that your audiences are fond enough of the star to accept his rather lazy performance here, play him up and have a go at the comedy possibilities of the plot in your advertising. "Ever see a man auctioned off at a country fair? That's what happens to Owen Moore in 'The Desperate Hero.'" "He was forced to work for two weeks as hired man for his business enemy! That's what starts the fun in 'The Desperate Hero.' See the rest of it." These are lines that might be used advantageously in advertising the production.

Highly Amusing Comedy; Only Drawback is Bad Beginning

AS A WHOLE.....Sure-fire comedy that picks up to fine pace after start that is marred by awful efforts at comedy in subtitles.
STORY.....Gives star very interesting and amusing character and provides him with number of great comedy sequences.
DIRECTION ..... Satisfactory
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Very good
CAMERA WORK .....Satisfactory
STAR.....Makes most of amusing role that gives him many opportunities.
SUPPORT.....Louise Lovely very good foil
EXTERIORS.....Exceptionally pretty mountain and stream shots.
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
DETAIL.....Much of comedy striven for in subtitles obviously doesn't belong.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Romance of rich girl and man who amusingly forces himself on her.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

After a most unpromising beginning, "The Joyous Troublemaker" develops into a sure-fire comedy with some great sequences between William Farnum and Louise Lovely in which much that is refreshingly original is revealed. The bad start is caused by the author of the subtitles. These are just like some of the awful ones that have appeared in the George Walsh comedies. They strive for a laugh so hard that they just naturally fall flat. They are neither humorous nor explanatory, don't belong in the action and never should have been put there.

Once they start picturing the real story, however, the title writer steps along in much better style. Such pieces of wit as, "When the government heard he was in Panama, they put locks on the canal," and "a saloon that kept everything but the ten commandments" are old but still useful in coaxing laughs. "You tell 'em Bell, my line's too phoney" is of more modern origin.

But by the grace of several excellent comedy sequences the subtitles become more and more subdued as the action goes on, gradually developing into sane and normal scenes.

The picture is merely the unusual romance of Bill Steele, fisherman and sportsman, and a rich young lady, Beatrice, nicknamed the Queen, who thinks she takes a dislike to him at their first meeting. An exceedingly melodramatic villain hovers in the offing, doing his darndest time and again to accuse Bill of his own dastardly acts before the girl. He seems rather foreign to the other elements of the picture as Henry Heerbert is inclined to overdraw him.

The first sequence between Bill and the Queen when she believes him a reporter is a fine laugh. The subtitles here are natural and emphasize the comedy points of the action. The sequence showing the girl forced to come and cook Bill's luncheon is another one fraught with fine comedy. In fact the various clashes between the two are the highest comedy spots in the picture.

The bit showing Bill trying to get a drink on returning to the United States after a long absence is also very funny and the manner in which he disposes of the three toughs by tieing them to a heavy log and marching htem off toward town is a trick that will ge a big laugh. Then here is a spectacular bit when they turn a whole river of water on these same men who plan to cheat Bill out of a mine.

All in all this ought to go very well. As regards location of the action and some minor details it is very often befuddling but the comedy by far makes up for this. G. Raymond Nye and Kewpie Morgan appear in addition to those mentioned.

Something Different For Farnum That Should Go Big

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The name of William Farnum usually stands for a western melodrama and they certainly hand you a surprise, nd a very pleasant one, when "The Joyous Troublemaker" develops into a comedy. Farnum has a keen comedy sense and handles his role here as if he enjoyed it hugely. And this attitude of his is infectious. The great majority of those who see this are going to enjoy it hugely.

The title isn't a very good one. It is appropriate but not specially attractive. Be sure, therefore, to bring out the comedy value of the production in your advertising matter. It might also be worth while to dwell on the fact tha this type of enertainment is unusual for the star. Make a special bid to his admirers to see him in this role. Promise them something of a surprise. And certainly his admirers are going to think a lot more of him after seeing this.

"UNDER CRIMSON SKIES"

A Glorious Romance of Love and High-Seas Adventure

TRULY, a great picture. A rousing, stirring picture. A romantic picture. A story that sweeps you up out of your humdrum life and carries you off to sea—to fight with strong, silent Elmo Lincoln against the perils of mutiny on the high seas—to fall in love with a beautiful woman and sacrifice liberty for her sake—to make a miraculous escape from the fetid dungeon of a southern republic and become master of a colony of beach-combers, conquering them by might of fist and brain and then—to save the one woman from a terrible fate in the midst of red revolution. Splendidly acted by a great company in outdoor scenes of tempest and sunshine rarely equalled for their marvelous photography. One of the few big productions of the year.

STORY.....Just suits star—well constructed and containing rising suspense.
DIRECTION.....Contains number of slips in timing of parallel sequences and in detail.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good

CAMERA WORK .....Commendable
STAR .....Right at home
SUPPORT.....Very good; Anna Nilsson opposite

DETAIL.....Director shouldn't have let star look so slick after fight or shown romantic touches in middle of golf tournament.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Idler nominated mayor by crooked politicians as "figurehead"—he turns tables on them.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,500 feet

Here is a distinctly pleasing picture with the star very well cast in a story that caters directly to the common sympathy and which rises in power of suspense as the action progresses. The role of the sportsman and society idler, nominated for mayor by conniving politicians as a figurehead, who turns upon them and makes a winning fight for a clean ticket suits Eugene O'Brien to the ground and he makes as much of the part as its many possibilities afford him.

There are some excellent mob scenes coming in the latter part of the picture during the very realistic debate between Sheridan Dows, the figurehead, and his opponent, Durfee. The scandal that Durfee has printed in his paper about Dows causes a riot in the hall which is only broken up by two mounted policemen who charge up the aisle and take the much menaced Durfee in charge. This whole sequence is excellently done and carries no small amount of suspense and thrill. The election night scenes are also well pictured with all the various details of the real article.

The picture as a whole registers very well indeed. After Dows has been nominated he starts in winning popular favor to the dismay of Durfee and his minions, who believed the opposition ticket would win in a walk. The story merely relates of the manner in which Dows fought against them and won. The best dramatic sequence aside from those already mentioned is the one in which Durfee plans to frame up Dows with Mary, his fiancee and co-worker. How this plan is frustrated makes a stirring sequence although the action parallel to it showing the reporters and cameramen coming to get the scandal story is not timed correctly with the main line.

O'Brien gets very satisfactory support from such capable players as Anna Nilsson, Joseph Girrard, Edwin Stevens, Ed Brady and Kate Price.

Various Forces In This Should Work For Its Succcess

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Eugene O'Brien in
"THE FIGUREHEAD"
Selznick-Select

Several forces in this picture should work toward completely satisfied audiences. In the first place it is one of the better ones that O'Brien has had with Selznick and in he second it comes along at a most timely season when the whole country is buzzing with nominees, conventions and the like.

So besides playing up O'Brien to his full worth it would be well to bring out the political angle of the story in your advertising. This can be done by employing such catch lines as, "He was nominated for mayor by a group of crooked politicians who thought to use him as a figurehead. See how he turned the tables and made a clean and winning fight." "A real drama in which the right pitted against the wrong in city political life, comes out the winner in a series of thrilling episodes."

It might also be well to mention the fact that Anna Nilsson appears opposite the star. Her many appearances with various well-known stars have made her popular.

CHARACTER OF STORY..Adventures of eastern-er with band of villains who attempt to compromise him before girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,785 feet

Due to lack of a real forceful story this picture goes down as a rather commonplace western. After a rather interesting beginning it builds along through a series of very conventional situations and has as its climax the old one in which the hero rescues the girl from a villain with dire intent. This situation is meant to have double force but the stuff they put in it in an endeavor to make it a bit out of the ordinary is retroactive in character and the climax will likely get a laugh. For previous to being in the power of the chief villain, his assistant had mauled the girl all over the little cabin. She believes the next villain is her rescuer but he pulls the same stuff as No. 1. When the hero finally comes along and again essays the rescue stunt the suspense has gone.

"Human Stuff," it is generally understood, is a shop phrase of the studio. Just why they should wish it on to a picture is hard to understand unless they didn't happen to have a real title handy. Certainly it doesn't convey much and certainly too there has been much more human stuff in other of Harry Carey's pictures than there is in this one.

Carey appears as Jim Pierce, son of a manufacturer, who after trying his hand at office business goes west to engage in sheep raising. He has enemies, the cattlemen who object to a sheep rancher in their midst, but sticks it out. He writes his father that he is lonely and needs a companion and that if there is any likable girl lying around loose he might send her on with the idea of matrimony.

Jim's sister writes him a letter that an old girl friend is coming west to look over ranch land. This letter is intercepted by the villain and Jim thinks the friend is the girl he asked his father to send. The villain, knowing that the girl has money, misrepresents Jim in her eyes and induces her to leave his care. Then come the various attacks on the girl and her final rescue by Jim. There is a nice light touch at the end showing Jim receiving the present his father sent him as "companion." It's a collie dog who has become mother of a large family en route.

The best draw character in the picture is that of Jim's father, a regular human being and played in regular human fashion by Rudolph Christians. The support throughout is satisfactory and includes Mary Charleston, Charles Le Moyne, Joe Harris, Fontaine La Rue, Ruth Fuller Golden and Bobby Mack.

Not Much to Offer to Other Than Star's Admirers

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This one doesn't measure up to the average of the Harry Carey productions because of a lack of story material. It passes muster as a fairly good western picture and before an audience of the star's admirers will probably get by. The fact that it is by no means big league stuff, will however be easily obvious to those who have no special liking for the star.

The situation in which Carey mistakes a prospective purchaser of land for a woman seeking to marry him might be used as the key in advertising lines. "She came to the west to buy land and instead found a man believing she had come to marry him! Why this mistake? See—" and "The story of a sheep raiser who makes a go of it in the cow country and if you know what cow-punchers think of sheep-raisers you'll know that was some go," these are lines that might be used to give an inkling as to the character of the production.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Hero brings back erring wife of friend and defeats ends of villain.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"Twins of Suffering Creek," after opening with the usual western's display of gun fighting in the main street of a frontier town, soon after develops into a picture that commands attention because it is just a bit out of the ordinary in the way of plot and principal characters. This atmosphere of newness which is maintained throughout the picture despite the showing of some conventional situations between heroine and villain, combined with some good light comedy moments, results in a very acceptable western production.

William Russell is the hero of the town of Suffering Creek. In a card game he detects Jim Pemberton cheating. Instead of the usual gun fight a hand is dealt to determine which man shall have the first shot at the other. Jim wins. He sets the time of the shooting at five o'clock three days later.

In the meantime Jim has persuaded Jess Jones, the only married woman in Suffering Creek, to leave her husband. She agrees only after Jim has promised to send for her little twins the next day. Jones is heartbroken when he discovers his wife's absence and goes after her. However, he receives a severe beating from Jim's men and returns to his home hopelessly downcast.

They work in some good light scene showing Bill, his pal, Sunny Oak, a gruff fellow and Little Casino, a dance hall girl in love with Bill, with the deserted twins. These register as sure fire in the way of humor and sentiment. After Jones has failed in his effort to bring back his wife, Bill goes for her and brings her home as she has discovered that Jim is a bad actor.

The next day Bill drives the stage coach containing the gold shipment to the next town and is severly wounded by bandits, operating under Jim's direction, but he reaches his destination with the shipment intact. He insists on driving back to Suffering Creek to keep his shooting date with Jim, but Jones has at last found his opportunity and killed him. Thus Bill is relieved of the necessity of permitting Jim to have a shot at his life and saves himself for Little Casino.

The attack on the stage coach and Bill's success in driving through the bandits is a good rapid sequence and produces a real thrill. The action subsequent to this is pretty intense and the interest is kept at a high pitch until the conclusion.

Russell works to advantage in the hero role and receives very good support. First honors go to E. A. Warren for his sympathetic portrayal of Jones and to Joe Ray, who appears in the light character of Bill's pal, Sunny Oak. Louise Lovely is Little Casino and Florence Deshon has a prominent part as Jess Jones, which she handles fairly well. Henry J. Heerbert, Bill Ryno and Malcolm Cripe and Helen Stone as the twins complete the cast.

Ought to Please the Majority of Audiences

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This story has some original twists and because of these and the generally satisfactory treatment accorded the whole picture it ought to get over very well with most audiences. It doesn't stand above the average line of western stuff that Russell has made, but certainly is better than his last two Fox pictures.

The poker hands and the result which hangs on the deal can be played up profitably in the advertising of the picture. A line such as "Had Life or Death stacked the cards? Bill's chances of living depended on a poker hand! Did he win the pot of Fate?" might be used to advantage. If you want to adopt this line for a lobby display an effective one might be the exhibition of two poker hands, one ace high, the other king high, all the other cards being low. "The King meant Life, but the Ace meant Death," could be used beneath them.

Terribly Slow Tempo Holds This One Down

"BLIND YOUTH"
National Picture Theatres, Inc.

DIRECTOR ..... Ted Sloman

AS A WHOLE.....Very slow picture that only works up real interest in closing scenes—subtitles way out of story's mood.
STORY.....Has been produced in such slow tempo that it seldom has chance to register.
DIRECTION.....Certainly didn't speed action in this sufficiently.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... All right
CAMERA WORK .....Average
PLAYERS.....Cast headed by Walter McGrain, Ora Carew and Leatrice Joy suffers from slow tempo.
EXTERIORS ..... Satisfactory

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Hero's regeneration after having been dragged down by inconsiderate "wife."
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,500 feet

Whatever possibilities there were contained in this adaptation of the play, "Blind Youth," have been almost completely buried due to the abnormally slow tempo of the action. Probably it was realized that a very conservative tempo was needed to bring out the high lights of the plot, but in this case they have gone too far altogether and as a result the picture drags so that it is a job to sit through it.

In addition to this there is the very serious fault of the subtitles. The majority of them are totally out of tune with the action itself. They weren't prepared in the right mood and as each one is shown the spectator is jarred out of the atmosphere created by the action.

The director has made a big mistake also in showing the hero in a mansion that would do credit to a Rockefeller's purse, just because one of his statue's was a success. Certainly no sculptor can afford a young palace to live in even though critics and public do acclaim one of his figures. His house and the way he lives give the impression that he cleared nothing under two million on his work.

In Paris, Maurie Monnier, a promising artist, marries Clarice, a model who spends all his money and gives him no inspiration. Her Latin idea of a wife's freedom clashes with Maurie's and they part. He goes to America to seek his mother and brother, whom he hasn't seen since when a child. They have little use for him because he is poor. On the point of suicide he meets Hope, another model, who inspires him to success and he makes a great name on his figure, "Blind Youth." Then his mother and brother decide they'll live with him.

Clarice comes to America and finds Maurie. She is ready to return to him, but realizing that he loves Hope, confesses that she never really married him in Paris because she already had a husband.

The best action in this is toward the end between the mother and her two sons, Maurie idealistic and unselfish, the other his exact antithesis. They make a number of plays for comedy throughout the picture, but while these are sometimes effective they aren't part of the main action and further tend to make it uninteresting as a result.

Walter McGrail, Ora Carew, Leatrice Joy, Clara Horton, Claire McDowell, Joseph Swickard, Leo White and Buddy Post are all inclined to feel the weight imposed upon them by the exceedingly slow tempo of the production.

No Star In This But Authors' Names Should Attract

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This one had possibilities but they are obscured. There still remain good advertising possibilities, but it wouldn't be well to go very strong on them inasmuch as the picture won't live up to anything in the superlative degree you happen to say about it.

You would do well to portray it as the struggles of an artist to achieve success, stating that the scenes are laid in the Latin quarter of Paris and in New York. This theme always proves quite attractive to the public and if you don't go into details and praise up the story this would be the best way to present it.

You haven't got a recognized star to feature here but most everyone knows the names of the authors, Lou Tellegen and Willard Mack. State that the feature is an adaptation of their play of the same name.

Some Short Reels

"A Happy Fool"—Universal

When an Easterner arrives in the west and makes too favorable an impression on the belle of the town, the foreman of the heroine's range is handed a knock-out punch by the little green monster jealousy and plans to eliminate his rival. James B. Warner is the good boy and Helen Lynch the leading lady who frustrates the villain's foul plots. While this does not at any time become too serious, it has the proper amount of action blended with bits of comedy and will interest. Louis D. Lighton is responsible for the story.

"All Dressed Up"—Pathe

In most of the Snub Pollard one reelers, they vary the character of the star more than they do the material given him. In this he starts out as a cabby and winds up as a self-invited guest at a party. There is little to laugh at most of the way, the biggest giggle coming when Snub produces a little bottle of liquor. A stately and portly official looking gentleman—he resembles William Jennings Bryan more than a little bit—walks toward him mysteriously, examines the fire-water and gives Snub a cork-screw of proportions. It's a good one on Bryan and will probably get a titter from any audience. Pollard incidentally looks funnier as the cab-driver than he does in evening clothes. Sammy, the clever colored lad, is not given as much to do this time as usual, which is unfortunate. The little fellow is an excellent foil for Pollard and always holds his end of it up efficiently. Summed up, this is an average one-reeler, the excellent technical production helping it.

"Edgar Takes the Cake"—Goldwyn

Booth Tarkington's first two Edgar stories screened by Goldwyn were extraordinarily good. The third was also humorous although not quite as funny as the others. This one too is much above the average comedy as far as actual quality is concerned. It lacks, however, the unique and delightful twists to be found in the others and the same continuity of theme. The opening school-room scene is not essential to the plot and as for the scheme of having the inconvenient errand imposed on Edgar make up the greater part of this—that plan was employed in the preceding number of the series. Johnny Jones as Edgar is in the limelight practically all the way through this, while Buddy Messenger and Lucille Ricksen are as usual included in the support. Mason K. Litson directed this and Barbara Kent has again penned the scenario.

"Biff Bang Bomb"—Christie

Jimmy Harrison, who is featured in this together with Dorothy Devore, is also credited with writing the story for this single reel. While the basic plot of the offering is not a new one, he has secured what actually amounts to a new angle, added the atmosphere of a newspaper office at the start and otherwise made it a meritorious vehicle. Dorothy Devore, who plays the other leading role, is a girl who is both attractive and an able performer. Beyond dobt she possesses possibilities which should ultimately lift her out of the one reel comedy class. At the start, Harrison is an inefficient reporter whose failure to secure news results in his being discharged. George French is the editor-in-chief and Miss Devore, his daughter, who loves the delinquent news hound. The loving pair concoct a Bolshevik plot (a real Bolshevik plot is mixed up with it) to enable Harrison to secure a story. It results in their being caught, escorted to jail, cleared and a happy finish. French is a capable performer but does not fit into the role of newspaper editor. He neither dresses nor looks the part and in addition smokes a pipe. Editors smoke cigars as a rule.

"Three Raisins and a Cake of Yeast"—Fox

The dangers of the home brew are humorously exposed in this animated cartoon in which Mutt and Jeff are again the principals. The little fellow sneaks some of the stuff into Mutt's grape juice glass and the reaction is akin to the effect of dynamite on a peaceful hillside. There is some very good comedy stuff when Mutt looks in the mirror and sees a whole row of reflections and then again an entire army of himself. The artist has again permitted his imagination to run riot and this combined with his fine technical knowledge of his craft has resulted in one of the best of the Mutt and Jeff numbers.

"Home James"—Christie

Rather thin as far as the theme is concerned and lacking real comedy value, this single reel Christie does not register any too heavily. Most of the humor seems to center about a number of changes of disguise Eddie Barry who again overacts, effects, in his efforts to determine the character of the man who would wed his niece. In a few places, this is of sufficient quality to provoke snickers, but most of it does not rise above the ordinary.

"A One Cylinder Love Riot"—Universal

From beginning to end, this is a continuation of knockabout bits, which in places do not register very heavily, but include enough commendable portions to hold it up. Billy Engel in a little flivver, which is introduced very cleverly, provokes a number of laughs and there is some more stuff of value after that. Judicious cutting would undoubtedly help this for there are a number of slow parts. In houses where they take to slapstick, this will go well; where audiences are discriminating it will not be accepted very readily. It is on the whole a bit above the average slapstick class.

"Ladies Must Dance"—Gayety

George Ovey's wearing of a variety of costumes furnishes the only laughable footage in this single reeler which has a theme that is so simple that it hardly merits the name. Ovey incidentally is a capable stepper and helps this along with his terpsichorean efforts which are in many cases laudable. It all concerns his antics as a dancing instructor. He secures the position after condemning dancing before his wife, who eventually finds out where he is occupied and leads him home.

"Grab the Ghost"—Pathe

Slapstick, seldom rising above the commonplace, is in evidence throughout this single reeler in which Snub Pollard occupies the principal role. From the very start, where Snub as the groom sits on the rear of the auto in which his bride rides in state until the finish where the ghost hoax is exposed, this fails to arouse more than passing interest but for one original scheme in the big chase that comes at the climax. A number of coppers arrive suddenly for no reason whatsoever, one of their number being exceedingly stout. When the policemen in single file endeavor to mount a flight of stairs and the portly member of the force blocks their way, the big laugh is sprung. Pathe some time ago turned out a spook comedy starring Harold Lloyd. Naturally, this being issued by the same organization invites comparison, and it must be said that it ranks a poor second to the other.

"Kid-ing the Landlord"—Universal

Landlords are rather reticent at present about renting apartments when the prospective tenants possess such encumbrances as babies. In this the efforts of a couple to secure a flat in spite of the fact that there is a youngster in the case, form the theme. Ben Davis wrote the story and scenario for the offering which while a trifle slow in a few places, moves along nicely and has a few cute touches. An acceptable one reeler which is enhanced by the fact that it is timely.

WD 6/20/20

Short Reels

"The Moonshine Feud"—Reelcraft

Moonshine, everyone will agree, is something worth while having a feud about in the present dry era. In this two reeler, however, the feud is not for the moonshine, but a struggle between a gang of liquor distillers and law abiding folk. Texas Guinan is the heroine and star, while T. N. T. Harvey is her leading man and Hal Fenner as the maker of fire-water causes everyone to hate him. Jay Hunt, as usual, directs and at the start faces the camera himself. They have a sort of trailer at the beginning and another at the finish showing scenes in what is announced as Texas Guinan's dressing room. Jay skips in with a manuscript and while he reads it, the rough and ready Texas tips an attentive ear. Follow: fadeout and then fadein, on big fight. Wow! A regular Kentucky crowd is attacking the heroic Texas and her family. Someone on the other side takes the proper kind of aim and her pa in the picture bites the dirty dust. And so it goes after the fight ends with the moonshiners trying to implicate her family. Harvey buts into the festivities long enough to have everyone biff him a few, but then when another big battle, which is drawn out a bit too much, takes place, arrives in time to capture the villains (all except those who were shot) and tell Texas how much he loves her. After that come another fadeout and fadein showing the initial scene in Tex's dressing room. She doesn't like the idea—says it needs some more killings, etc. And then Jay Hunt becomes peeved. It's stuff that her followers will like. Action and comedy combined with some novelty in the manner in which this is introduced and closed should put it over.

"Home Brew"—Universal

Although the title of this suggests that much liquor is to be dispensed and the result is to be considerable souse stuff, no aqua fortis makes its appearance except in one or two early scenes. There is a great deal of fast action and numerous girls in athletic costumes pose before the camera. It seems to be the custom in these comedies to devote as much of the footage as possible to the exposed ladies who usually hold attention and in some cases enable the productions to get by. In this, however, there is little that is really laughable and not even the shapely lasses are likely to enable it to score very solidly.

Another Flagg Satire

Some time ago Famous Players released a few satirical productions penned by James Montgomery Flagg, but discontinued handling them after a while. Last week, Jack Eaton flashed another one reeler conceived by Flagg's mind at the Strand, called "Pride and Po'k Chops." It is an offering which will not be let out, according to Eaton, and makes two characters from the sunny region the subject of humor. And it may be said in summarizing the piece that the same fault evident in the other Flagg reels is apparent again. The rather broad satire is much—very much too much—over the heads of the average audience, and even the Strand audience, which certainly is sophisticated, failed to greet it with more than a few slight titters. From a purely artistic point of view, this is not as good a comedy as some of the others of the set. It has several points that are really funny, but as Eaton puts it, "Most people do not seem to know what satire is."

Pathe Review, No. 50

The screen magazine is a type of amusement that can be made to possess both entertainment and instructional value. Its variety and the brevity of the various parts usually make it more interesting. Of the release of this type turned out recently, this one undoubtedly ranks close to the top. Two colored parts, one a slow motion study, a section in which Dr. Ditmars discusses the effect of music on several animals, an educational portion in which the manner in which new buoys are floated in place of those too old for efficient service, and the Spanish Fandango, interpreted by the Senoritas Mari and Juli Berdiales, celebrated steppers from Sunny Spain, all hold attention. The opening colored scenic is laid in the Orient and is followed immediately by the part dealing with the buoys. Thereafter, a French athlete performs a number of difficult gymnastic exercises. An elephant, monkeys, Arabian wild horse and porcupine show their feeling for music, and then the making of Seidlitz powders is taken up. Closin gis the dance part, in which there is a good opportunity for the enterprising musical conductor to get a good effect.

"The Jazz Bandits"—Fox-Sunshine

This comedy number contains a lot of good business, tricks and original ideas, yet at the same time it isn't coherent enough even for this type of picture. Most of the knockabout numbers have more or less of a plot and this one hasn't the least semblance of one. Furthermore two scenes stand out among the good ones as being in exceptionally bad taste. The egg cracking on the dome of the sleeping Glen Cavendar is terribly messy and will doubtless disgust most people. The other bit is the dropping of a greasy looking mess of food on a gentleman's head. This gag is still good for laughs despite its age if the stuff is clean. And it isn't here. With these bits eliminated "The Jazz Bandits" will stand as good entertainment because of its originality. The funniest sequence takes place in a hotel. The bandits keep their Ford in their bedroom, motor out into the hallway and descend to the lobby via an elevator. A sign reading "No Fords allowed in the halls after ten o'clock" is bound to register, and the bandits being pinched for speeding in the hotel lobby is another trick that gets over well. At the end there is some good stuff pulled with a barber shop as the setting and the picture ends with the usual chase, although it isn't played up in the conventional spectacular fishion. Roy Del Ruth directed this and others in the cast besides Cavendar are Dave Morris and Ethel Tears.

"The Great Round-Up"—Universal

Arthur Henry Gooden is the author of this two reel western in which Dixie Lamont, Leo Maloney and Fred Kohler are the principal characters. It all concerns the efforts of Kohler, who has cultivated a truly villainous sneer to force the cute Dixie to marry him. And that is where the rub comes; Dixie loves the manly Maloney. Kohler, however, is not put off thus easily and by a cleverly arranged plan with a counterfeiter gets Maloney into a heap of trouble. The latter gets out of it of course, rounding up the crooks and clearing himself in time to enjoy the finishing close-up. An easily acceptable production of its type.

"The Death Trap"—Universal

Using the same sets seen in some of the former issues of this series as well as the some characters, Jacques Jaccard is injecting the same atmosphere into all of his offerings. He has written a highly commendable vehicle this time also, furnishing a story that has thrills, action, love, interest and humor blended in the proper proportion. Basically it's the same idea Jaccard used before. Leonard Clapham is the member of the Royal Mounted Police and Virginia Faire, the wild and untamed lass of the wooded hills. A French-Canuck who would wed the fair Miss Faire has suspicion cast upon Clapham for the murder of a pair of Indians. And then they fight until a gun, which happens to be discharged, wounds the arch evil-doer. But it doesn't kill him quick enough to prevent his making a confession that clears hero Clapham. The final close-up shows one of the other characters getting a kiss from the prospective bride. A novel touch to a satisfactory production.

"Polo and Rocks of Poumanach"—Educational

This Educational reel is made up of two parts—one dealing with polo and the other shot in Brittany, showing the curious rocks of Poumanach. The Stereospeed system was employed to film the initial section and this example of the slow motion picture as turned out by Earl Emlay impresses. Polo as a game is not known to the general run of picture fans and the spectacle of the skilled horsemen riding about after the elusive sphere and illustrating several points of the game will probably not interest them as much as would an exhibition of some other sport. Nevertheless, it has been done in good fashion. The latter portion is unique and unusual, having also been filmed well.

Labor Films Planned

By New Organization — Probably Use Studio in Pittsburgh for Production Headquarters

The Labor Film Service, Inc., the incorporation of which was published in WID'S DAILY recently, has plans under way for the regular output of industrials and entertainment films designed for showing in labor centers.

The organization attributes its entrance into the motion picture field to the following, taken from one of its pamphlets:

"In all this vast output of film productions, the intelligent and progressive mind is almost always repelled by the senseless presentation of the different aspects of present-day civilization. Invariably, deep-rooted prejudice and ingrained convention make of the motion picture an exhibition of disgusting nonsense.

"Again and again the indefensible objects and predatory purposes of capitalism are sponsored and supported by motion pictures in a shamelessly biased manner. All the economic wrongs and political tyrannies which the Laborite, Liberal and Radical join hands in condemning and combatting, find unstinted praise and a shining halo in an unending series of film productions, manufactured and exploited by corporations completely controlled by capitalists who dictate and bring about these very forms of oppression."

The organization states that it has already had requests from as many as 5,000 sources for films showing

Lloyd in Features

Comedian May Branch Out from Two Reelers for Associated Exhibitors

With the signing of Harold Lloyd by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., comes the report from apparently reliable sources that the comedian, who has been making two reelers lately for Pathe distribution, will probably make five-reel comedies after making 10 or 12 two reelers for Associated.

Lloyd, who was under contract to Pathe, has been released from that obligation. He will, however, turn over three more comedies to Pathe beginning with "High and Dizzy," which will be released July 11.

Lloyd is expected to make about six two reel comedies a year for Associated. He may make the two reelers for two years and then enter the regular feature length field.

Pathe places the financial amount involved in the transfer of Lloyd to Associated at $1,500,000.

Laboratory Men Will Do Everything to Avoid Walkout—Coast Being Organized

Contrary to published reports, the laboratory men in the East will walk out only as a last resort. So said George G. Woodruff, who has been a laboratory man for about 15 years, said that the union was not anxious for a strike and that everything will be done to avoid the possibility of the men laying off work.

It was said on Saturday that a conservative estimate of the total num-

Philadelphia—Harry M. White, manager of the local Goldwyn exchange and chairman of the Motion Picture Group of the Chamber of Commerce, has resigned.

White's plans are unknown, as is his successor. It is known, however, that he has contemplated leaving the local Goldwyn office for some time and that he has had several propositions in New York under consideration.

Strike Seems Remote

ber of men at work in the 38 laboratories around New York was 2,600. Of this number Woodruff says the union has 2,100 enrolled.

From information secured from the secretary of the union, it was gathered that laboratory workers all over the country are being organized. Woodruff said that in Chicago, 311 men have joined the Motion Picture Craftsmen, Local No. 630. These men were gathered from nine Chicago laboratories and have as president of the union Sam Lucus, who is with the Spoor-Thompson laboratory.

On the coast there is another union in process of formation, according to Woodruff, who says there are 17 laboratories in California to draw members from.

Apparently, the movement in New York is purely a local one at this stage, at any rate. Woodruff said, however, that there was every possibility of the new wage scale spreading across country, if it is adopted here.

In the list of the new demands submitted by the union, and there are 21, the last provides for an adoption of a trade seal. The 21st provision reads as follows:

"The General Executive Board of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada, sitting in convention at Cleveland, Ohio, May 24 to 28, 1920, received Delegate George G. Woodruff, Motion Picture Craftsmen Local No. 614, of New York City, and Delegate Frank G. Kirby, Cinematographers, Local No. 557, of New York City, who appeared in behalf of the Motion Picture Laboratory Workers and Motion Picture Cameramen, respectively, and petitioned for the adoption of a 'trade seal' for motion picture films.

"On a motion regularly made and seconded and unanimously carried it was decided to grant authority to the Motion Picture Cameramen, Local No. 557, to mark with a perforated punch any and all scenes photographed on negative film so that the laboratory men might identify film photographed by cameramen affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E. It was further decided to grant to the Motion Picture Craftsmen, Local No. 614, the authority to place and use the embossed seal of the I. A. T. S. E. in any and all laboratories manufacturing positive film, providing said laboratories recognize and employ laboratory men affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E. The intent and purpose in granting such authority is to enable the 22,000 Motion Picture Machine Operators, located throughout the United States, who are affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E., to identify film manufactured by organized labor."

Woodruff said that there is no very great amount of friction between the union and the owners. He said that in some cases the new wage scale will mean a saving for the owners instead of an additional expense, and claims the scale was formulated to primarily assist the less skilled labor.

To emphasize the union's "fair play" spirit, Woodruff produced a letter, copies of which have been sent to all laboratory workers. It says:

"Acting upon the suggestion of several manufacturers of motion picture film, we are presenting, at this time, the terms and conditions under which we hope to elevate the position of those persons engaged in the laboratory production of motion picture film, to the standard, as set by other progressive industries, and we would appreciate your thorough consideration of same.

"We fully realize that the manufacturer has been subject to the same conditions that we have and, in the spirit of fairness, we do not wish to subject him to any embarrassing conditions or changes, without first giving him an opportunity to adjust his affairs accordingly. We do not desire the domination of labor; nor do we wish to subjugate the employer to the employee, but we do desire and demand an equal basis for bargaining for that, to which, by every law of justice and fair-play, we are entitled; namely, a just recompense for our labor.

"We hope through cooperative bargaining to determine a course that will prove of mutual benefit and we are confident that you will find the aims and objects of our organization, when fully developed and materialized, will be highly productive of a more friendly and cordial relationship between the manufacturer and his employee.

"Should the manufacturers decide to meet, we will be pleased to appear and verbally amplify our requests, at your convenience, and our executive board, or members thereof, would appreciate an opportunity for the exchange of ideas."

As far as opposition from the National Association is concerned Woodruff said only 10 plants belong to Class C of the association, while he figures there are 38 in Greater New York. This could not be confirmed at the association.

Woodruff said he had learned that the meeting of "lab" owners held last week resulted in the appointment of a committee to represent all laboratories around New York. This committee has written Woodruff asking for a joint meeting at which the matter can be thrashed out. Until Saturday noon Woodruff had not received the communication.

The above is interesting in view of the fact that Albert A. Kaufman previously announced the signing of Holubar. Word from the coast indicates the first picture is already under way.

An effort was made to reach the Marshall Neilan offices where Kaufman makes his New York headquarters to learn if any information relative to the above could be obtained, but everyone had gone. Neither could any one be reached at First National or the offices of Joseph M. Schenck.

Ready for Hulsey

Texan Exhibitors Secure New First National Franchise—Leave for Home.

Tom H. Boland, of the Empress, Oklahoma City, Ross. D. Rogers, of Dye, Ford and Rogers, owning and operating theatres in Amarilla, Wichita Falls, Plainview and Canyon, Texas, Saul S. Harris, who operates the Royal, Kempner, Crystal and Gem of Little Rock, Ark,, and Claude J. Musselman, owner of the Grand in Paris, Texas, and who is building a new house in Corsicanna, Texas, left for home last night after spending several days in New York, during which time arrangements were completed and details finally arranged for the acceptance of the Associated First National franchise in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Immediately upon their return to the Southwest these four exhibitors will perfect the organization of the new territorial enterprise for First National, to be known as Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Texas. The new cooperative body will maintain offices in Dallas, Oklahoma City and Little Rock.

The first step in the activities of the new franchise holders, will be the extension of sub-franchises in the Southwest territory.

It was learned from First National yesterday that E. H. Hulsey's old First National contract expires in December.

A formal statement, issued jointly by Messrs Boland, Harris, Rogers and Musselman outlines the policy and course they have adopted as the guide to their activity in directing the affairs of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Texas. It reads, in part:

"With our fellow independent exhibitors in the Southwest we have obtained definite and lasting assurances, through the new main franchise award, of permanent and representative sources of film supply with all which that implies. This divides the Southwest territory into two distinct factions, and it remains to be seen to just what extent a united opposition from independent exhibitors, thoroughly intrenched with guaranteed production sources will be able to more than hold its own in maintaining individualism among the theater owners."

Zanft Going Abroad

Schenck a Partner

Following the publication in WID'S DAILY yesterday of the Allan Holubar affiliation with Joseph M. Schenck, it developel that the latter is a partner with Albert A. Kaufman in both the Allen Holubar productions and the Sidney Franklin Productions.

Schenck's arrangement with Kaufman provides for the former to secure a distribution contract and accordingly it was through Schenck that the Holubar pictures were placed with First National. Nothing has been announced as to the disposal of the Franklin pictures.

Schenck sails with his wife, Norma Talmadge for Europe August 14. Albert Parker who has just finished "The Branded Woman" with Norma goes with them. If conditions are favorable one picture will be made abroad. If not the party will be back in New York by October 1.

In the Courts

In the suit of the X Amusement Co against the Hermes Amusement Co. to restrain the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff in its possession of the film theater at 125th St. and Amsterdam Ave., the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has decided against the plaintiff and has vacated an order staying the ousting of the plaintiff from the premises, where it claims to have spent $50,000 fitting up the building for a theater. The defendant leased the premises from the Ninth Ave. Railroad Company, the owner, after the latter had revoked the lease to the New York City Railways Co., which sublet the premises to the plaintiff.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has decided that Benjamin R. Gornto is entitled to recover $7,500 from the Mirror Films, the Lambart Films, Inc., Clifford B. Harmon and Harry Lambart in his suit for damages for conspiracy by the defendants to destroy his contract for the sale of stock. After a jury before Justice Dugro had found a verdict for the defendant, but before the judgment roll had been signed, Justice Dugro died. Justice Tierney decided that the case must be tried anew, but the Appellate Division holds that this is unnecessary and that judgment may be entered on the verdict.

Harry M. and Abe Warner have filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of Helen Holmes to recover on note for $5,000 on which $2,000 is due and which they refuse to pay.

They allege that on Oct. 16 last she made a contract with them to appear as star in a serial film and agreed to give her exclusive services and to pose when called on.

They were to pay her $10,000 at the rate of $500 a week and say she understood that her failure to give her services as agreed would result in irreparable injury to them. They say they spent $35,000 exploiting and advertising the serial, but that she failed to appear at reasonable times to post, and on Feb. 8 last refused to go to the studio for four days, keeping the cast and director waiting, although she was able to appear.

They allege that on April 1, when the picture was about to be completed, she refused to continue unless they made the $5,000 note in her favor, and they did so to prevent their expenditure from being a total loss. For this reason they say the note was without consideration.

A jury before City Court Justice Finelite returned a verdict for Dave Blank in a suit brought against him by Albert Strauss for $2,000 on the ground that Strauss was to be paid this sum for introducing him to Morris Klopack and Max Pinsky and inducing them to become associated with him in the Evergreen Theater in Brooklyn. Blank denied that he made such an agreement.

Prager Talks

In order to make Mayflower's stand more emphatic Benjamin A. Prager, president of the company, has seen fit to issue the following statement:

"The report printed in a recent issue of a trade paper to the effect that Mayflower is considering a proposal to align itself with a new producing-distributing concern being formed by Isaac Wolper is altogether untrue. No such proposal has even been tendered to Mayflower and we know nothing whatsoever of the project.

"Because of our contract with the Associated First National Exhibitors, signed a few weeks ago, it would be impossible to consider such a proposition even if it were submitted.

"Any statement linking Mayflower's name with another producing or distributing concern is an injustice to us and to the organization which distributes our product."

News Reel Important

Says Hugo Riesenfeld—Interesting Ideas on Program Building

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Criterion, Rialto and Rivoli, thinks the value of the news reel is becoming increasingly important.

"The news reel," said Dr. Riesenfeld, "is becoming a more and more important part of our program. As the motion picture develops, we find new possibilities not only for the camera, but for everything connected with films, so that we can delve deeper and deeper into life for the screen.

"Of the news part of the news reel enough has been said of late. Generally, the titles are fair and accurate. Now and then there is an editorial utterance or a sneer that we feel obliged to eliminate, but that is to be expected. Pressure from the exhibitors alone will keep the screen clean, because the exhibitor is the representative of the public in dealing with the producer.

"The most interesting phase of the news reel to me at present is the magazine feature part. A newspaper does not live by news alone; its great circulation depends on other things: sports, women's page, editorials, and so on. Editorials we do not want as yet, but the magazine, cartoons and women's features are essentials. Of these we cannot get enough in the open market, so we are having them produced especially for the Criterion, Rivoli and Rialto theaters.

"We have engaged Marcus, the famous cartoonist of the New York Times, to draw a weekly cartoon for us; we have made arrangements with Julian Ollendorff to prepare a series of folk-dances in colors for us, and we are reaching out for more and more short features to make our screen newspaper worth while.

"Of course, the feature picture is the big thing in the motion picture theater, but there is room for an infinite variety of interesting and educational matter."

Bowes, Theater Head

Will Head New Division of Goldwyn —40 Houses by December, Says Gudger

Edward Bowes, vice-president and managing director of the Capitol theater and now a member of the board of directors of Goldwyn by virtue of the latter's recent deal with the Capitol will head what is to be called the theater division of the Goldwyn Pictures Corp. This much was confirmed yesterday by Francis A. Gudger, a vice-president of Goldwyn in answer to an inquiry along these lines.

Mr. Gudger said that the appointment was made when Goldwyn announced its interest in the Capitol although no public announcement was made of the fact.

When asked how many theaters Goldwyn either owned or was interested in, Mr. Gudger said that off hand he would place the number at 25. Of these, he said the Ascher Bros.' string plays an important part, although the total number does not represent a concentrated group in any one section of the country but is scattered from Los Angeles to New York.

In various circles it was reported that Goldwyn had lined up 40 theaters in its chain but yesterday Mr. Gudger said that was a figure that included future operations. He did say that by the end of the year the chain is expected to total that number.

Mr. Gudger hinted at some very elaborate production plans which his company has under way.

"I am not going to tell you what they are," said he, "but you just watch. We are going to deliver the goods."

No Tax Reduction

Until July, 1921 At Least, Republican House Leader Says In Special Report

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—Federal taxes will not be reduced until July 1, 1921 at least, according to a statement entered yesterday into the Congressional Record by Representative Mondell of Wyoming who is the Republican leader of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Mondell's statement says that when Congress again meets in December the way will be seen clear for a reduction of taxes but no where does he mention when the taxes are likely to be removed or made less burdensome. He is quite sure, however, that the reduction cannot be before the beginning of the fiscal year, July 1, 1921.

In one portion of Mr. Mondell's statement, he says that he holds no hope for a return to a pre-war basis.

Embargo On

In Germany Again, According to Cable Received by Export and Import Film Co.

The embargo against foreign films has again been clamped on in Germany, according to a cable received yesterday by L. Auerbach, of the Export and Import Film Co., Inc.

4 Theaters Building

Minneapolis—Ruben and Finkelstein, holders of the First National franchise in this territory, now have four large theaters under construction. These are the New Capitol, St. Paul, and the New Capitol, Blue Mouse and Nicollet in Minneapolis. These additions bring their theater holdings in the Twin Cities past the 30 mark.

They have taken over the entire fourth floor of the Loeb Arcade, one of the most centrally located and prominent office buildings here.

The new offices will provide quarters for the executives, a large developing room, projection room, accounting department and a section for the press department.

One end of the floor will contain quarters for the northwestern branch of the Educational Films Corp., of which M. S. Finkelstein, I. H. Ruben, Theodore L. Hays of the firm, and J. F. Cubberley, manager of the Minneapolis First National Exchange, are officers. At the other end of the building are the offices occupied by First National. Moving to the new offices will begin in the next few days.

Uncertain labor conditions have been responsible for delays in christening the New Capitol in St. Paul. However, present indications show that its doors will be thrown open in September. This theater, which will cost approximately $2,000,000, will seat 2,500. The Minneapolis New Capitol will probably be opened late this year.

Work on the other two Minneapolis theaters is progressing. The Blue Mouse, in the heart of the loop district, is rapidly nearing completion. The new building enterprises will give the firm a seating capacity of more than 7,000 for the Twin Cities.

School boards and regents of universities and colleges in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa and Wisconsin are being lined up to show the films as part of their curricula by Ruben and Finkelstein in connection with Educational's product in the Northwest.

To carefully chose a good program and then to exploit it with ordinary posters is to get nothing but your labor for your pains. Only RITCHEY posters enable the exhibitor to garner the gains to which he is justly entitled.

Rivoli

The Rivoli has an all-comedy bill this week, practically every number from overture to organ solo being in light vein. The overture is Keler Bela's "Hungarian Comedy." A Robertson-Cole scenic, "The Lone Trapper," hits the most serious spot of the program, but contains a number of laughs in the subtitles. A stirring duet from Bizet's "The Pearlfishers" is rendered by Martin Brefel and Edoardo Albano. The Rivoli pictorial besides offering the usual news pictures, including poses of Harding and Coolidge, contains a big laugh in the current Mutt and Jeff comedy, "Three Raisins and a Cake of Yeast." This goes very big.

To the tunes of "Humoresque" and "Dardanella," Mme. Lubovska, assisted by Thalia Zonau, renders an original dancing bit entitled, "A Soldier's Romance." Mme. Lubovska is still appearing at the Criterion, this performance being in addition to her work at the long run house. The scene is full of color both as to setting and action.

"Sick Abed" with Wallace Reid registered excellently with the Sunday night crowd. Following the Rivoli orchestra renders another novelty number, "Musicians' Strike," which also went over in fine shape. In the middle of the piece various players lay down their instruments and make their exits, until at the end there is no one left but the drummer and finally he, too, walks off. The members of the orchestra enjoyed this immensely and so did the audience.

Conductor Frederick Stahlberg proved himself a fine actor in registering amazement and protest at his musicians' departure. "Footprints," a Vitagraph comedy, featuring Joe Rock, scored with its acrobatics and trick photographic work and "Scottish Fantasy" on the organ concluded.

Rialto

A varied program of nine numbers evenly balanced by screen, musical and novelty bits is being offered to the public at the Rialto this week. Immediately following the overture "Phedre," the Scientific Film Corp. present microscopic pictures in colors showing the process of blood circulation. While very instructive and a fine example of the possibilities of motion picture photography, this sort of thing is hardly suited to theater audiences.

The Ampico reproducing piano plays Rubinstein's First Movement Concerto in D Minor. Then comes William S. Hart in "Sand." The Monday matinee audience appeared quite pleased with it. Alma Doria, soprano, sings aria of Elisabeth from "Tannhauser." The Rialto Magazine containing such current topics as Dempsey's acquittal on the slacker charge and various other present day happenings brought forth an unusual demonstration for Broadway. Hisses and applause fought for first place. Miss Desha was seen in a bubble dance, Al St. John in a comedy, "The Aero-Nut," and Pilgrim's Song on the organ concluded.

Strand

From the looks of the house the first three days of the week it would seem that the Strand was about to hang up a new record. There's a double feature bill on with Mack Sennett's "Married Life" headlining and Tom Moore in "The Great Accident" running for second honors. The Sennett feature has been hevaily advertised and the box office power of his name combined with that of Ben Turpin (whose pictures in oils adorn the sidewalk frames) are obvious to anyone with half an eye.

At seven-fifteen Sunday night, an hour when the crowds are usually drifting leisurely in, the house was jammed and the lobby roped off to hold the incoming crowds. The bill in order is, "Fantasie Hongroise" the overture, the Topical Review, "The Great Accident," a vocal number, "Then You'll Remember Me," rendered by Redferne Hollinshead, "Married Life" and "Polonaise Militaire" the organ solo.

Broadway

William Collier in "The Servant Question," Charles Chaplin in a revival of "The [illegible] numbers, the management having relied o the drawing power of the [illegible] the trick. The overture is "Glorianna. The Topical Review and Scenic of the Da follow and then comes the Chaplin picture.

The revue, headed by Bert Earle, show a number of girls playing different musica instruments. It's an act slightly differer from that seen on the usual vaudeville tim and registers nicely. "The Servant Que tion" follows and the organ solo concludes.

Capitol

S. L. Rothapfel's third program at th Capitol again displays his unique ability o combining pictures with appropriate music The prelude to the feature, "Passers By," which utilized the Capitol ensemble in a Lon don fog scene, and the rendering of Ha waiian airs after and during the rendition o some Prizma pictures showing scenes o Hawaii, give notable evidence of this. Th bill as a whole is very well balanced and th

Hart claims that he was to receive 1,000, a one-third interest in a spe-ial company formed to exploit the Hart pictures, and $50,000 clear of ny Government taxes that might ave developed.

The Ince defense claims that at the me the contract with Hart was rawn up the former objected to Hart's securing $50,000 irrespective f any income or government taxes nd that the contract was closed in ne, 1917, and the Great Western rod., Inc., formed. Ince says the ntract gave Hart $1,000 weekly as lary and $4,000 weekly on account guaranteed dividends and bonuses.

Hart, however, alleges that he was so entitled to one-half of the profits f the corporation, which he says ere $201,664 for the quarter ending ctober, 1919. It is for $100,832, or ne-half of this amount that Hart es.

Ince says the profits for the quar-r mentioned did not exceed $131,-4. The Great Western sold the ctures made by Hart to Artcraft ictures Corp.

Hart originally brought suit gainst Ince in February for an ac-unting of the profits.

He has now filed a second suit in hich he asks for $165,109.19 on the rounds practically identical with ose outlined in the first suit.

The bill opens with Wagner's "Thannhauser" as overture and immediately following comes Paderewski's "Minuet," with ballet and ensemble. The Hawaiian numbers follow and then come the news pictures accompanied by spirited selections by the orchestra. Subsequent to the feature the ballet and ensemble makes its second appearance in Victor Herbert's "March of the Toys." This number registered excellently with its novelty. "Solid Concrete," a Larry Semon comedy, got over in particularly fine shape and selections on the organ conclude.

Reported Goldwyn Will Erect Theater in Coast City

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Real estate circles are interested in the arrival of Samuel Goldwyn.

It has been rumored for some time that Goldwyn intends erecting in this city a theater that will rival anything else on the coast. At the present time this company has a lease on the California. There is considerable anticipation that on this visit something may be announced by the president concerning the company's plans in this respect.

A vice-president of Goldwyn stated yesterday that there was absolutely nothing to the Los Angeles report.

"We have two theaters now," he said. "The California is ours and we also have an interest—a slight interest—in Miller's theater there."

Block Back

Ralph Block of Goldwyn has returned from abroad.

New Nat'l Circuit

Corp. in Los Angeles, which is to supply International with as many pictures per month or per year as the exhibitor board of directors may desire.

For purposes of operation International has divided the United States and Canada into four sections which are as follows:

Eastern—Including the following exchange centers, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburg, Newark and all of Canada east of Fort Williams.

Southern—Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas.

Central—Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis, Louisville, Chicago, Milwaukee, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and Des Moines.

Pacific—Denver, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles and all of Canada west of Fort Williams.

Pending the election of a permament board of directors and officers of the organization, International has elected temporary officers who are acting without any pay and who have agreed, it is said, to resign their offices when the permanent officials are elected. The final elections will be held at a meeting which will be held from three to six weeks hence, either in New York or Chicago. It was impossible to ascertain yesterday who these individuals are.

The board of directors will be composed of seven members and other officers will include a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer.

The four divisions into which the country is divided will elect members to comprise the board of directors with the eastern section supplying two, the central two, the Pacific two and the south one.

These directors will be empowered to act for the entire group of franchise holders in their respective districts and the various directors are to be governed by the body of franchise holders they represent.

International, it can be safely said, in reality plans to absorb the old United parent organizations, although the personnel of the franchise holders will in no sense be identical with that of United Picture Theaters.

In some sections of the country, according to Milton M. Goldsmith, who is prominently identified with International, groups of old United franchise holders have banded together in order to secure the new International franchise while in New Orleans, for example, said Goldsmith, Pearce Films, who handled the old United product, have secured the new International franchise for that territory.

International embodies the original Second National Exhibitors' Circuit idea, which, it will be recalled, Lee A. Ochs launched. Since the latter is vice-president of the U. P. Prod. company, it is expected that he will have considerable to say in International and in view of the fact that he has allied Bryant Washburn and another star not yet announced, it will not be at all surprising if the Washburn productions will be released through International.

Mr. Goldsmith stated yesterday that 50 per cent. of the territory had alread been sold.

United Picture Prod. Corp. has on its shelves eight pictures not yet released. These are Florence Reed in "The Eternal Mother," two Jane and Katherine Lee two-reel productions, Marguerite Marsh in "Face to Face" and four more, the names of which could not be ascertained yesterday.

Goldsmith stated yesterday that he expected to experience no trouble in bringing around the various creditors of the two United units to the International idea. He practically stated that the creditors had left in his hands a method of reorganization which could take any form he thought best.

He said that the productions company will not be liquidated and that there is a strong possibility of the theaters company being continued in very much the same relationship that Associated First National bears to First National.

Franchises are to be granted on a ten-year basis, according to present plans. The plans also provide for International to become the owner of 50,000 shares of common stock of the United Picture Prod. Corp., which is marketed on the New York Curb.

This stock is to form part of a selling pool which according to International "should realize a large amount to the circuit and we have reason to believe that as soon as sufficient contracts have been signed for the various franchises in the United States and the United Picture Productions Corp will resume producing, that this stock will again reach a high price on the New York Curb."

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Dover, Del.—International Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., has been formed here by representatives of the Corporation Trust Co.

The company is capitalized at $200,000.

It is reported here that the new organization includes some of the prominent officials of United Picture Theaters. O'Donnell refused to talk about the new move. He leaves shortly for Omaha and St. Louis.

Community M. P. Bureau the Producer With Official Approval of the Governor

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Boston—The State of Maine is to be reproduced in motion pictures. The Community M. P. Bureau, a Massachusetts organization, with headquarters in Boston and New York, is carrying out this enterprise. A crew of camera men with headquarters at the Congress Square Hotel, Portland, are at work. Ashley Miller is in charge. Philip Davis, Northeastern director looks after the New England division.

If Governor Carl E. Milliken's plans can be carried out, the work will be finished in time to be shown at the Portland Celebration. The state institutions are to be filmed.

Governor Milliken intends to give the pictures wide distribution, first through the theaters in Maine and then generally through the schools, colleges and industrial plants. After this the Community M. P. Bureau will distribute the films.

Britton Co. Officers Elected

At the first organization meeting of Sumner Charles Britton, Inc., recently formed for the purpose of making features, Sumner Charles Britton was elected president; Geo. New Series Planned by Garson

Information received from the coast yesterday indicates that Harry Garson who has placed Sada Cowan under contract to write stories for him plans to make a special series of pictures from Miss Cowan's stories.

Joseph Schnitzer of Equity Pictures when asked whether he would handle the new series said yesterday he hadn't heard about it. Garson, under his arrangement with Equity can release other pictures elsewhere so long as the Clara Young series go through Equity, according to Schnitzer.

Equity is now releasing its second special "Whispering Devils" with Conway Tearle. The company is also handling "Keep to the Right" a feature made by Curtis Pictures Corp. and directed by John Adolfi.

NOTICE TO FILM SALESMEN

We have not employed a single new salesman to sell Franchises. We will not do so.

Our regular salesmen on their rounds selling film are explaining the Franchise Plan to exhibitors whom we want to have with us. The Circuit had grown powerful before Franchises were thought of and we are content to let the Franchise Proposition take care of itself. Business is good.

"You fellows are slow—you ought to wake up," said an exhibitor who has just joined up with First National. "You ought to put a lot of salesmen in the field and sell out your Franchises quick." He said he would have bought a month ago if he had been urged. But the point is—he came in and joined of his own accord.

The fact is that we're in no wild rush to sell Franchises. We don't want any theatre owner to join us until he is convinced it will be for his own good and we are convinced that he is the man we want. It is for our mutual benefit and we do not want any man to act hastily. We know our proposition is sound. We are giving exhibitors more than they are giving us.

Our Franchises are a lot like sugar—the demand is sure to exceed the supply.

"Lab" Men to Rally

Meeting Scheduled for This Afternoon at Bryant Hall—Owners Met in Closed Session Yesterday

The Motion Picture Craftsmen, No. 614 which is affiliated with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and M. P. Machine Operators of the United States and Canada will hold a mass meeting at Bryant Hall at 2:30 this afternoon.

At the meeting, it is expected there will be present representatives of the Local 306 which is the operator's union.

The Motion Picture Craftsmen is the organization which has presented 21 demands to the laboratory owners around Greater New York asking for increased wages and the adoption of a "trade seal."

It was impossible to learn yesterday for what purpose the rally had been called but it was stated by one union official who wouldn't permit his name to be used that fully 1,000 laboratory workers were expected to attend the meeting.

There was a meeting of the laboratory owners held in the rooms of the National Association yesterday morning. Frederick H. Elliott, secretary of the National Association said he couldn't divulge what occurred at the meeting as it was held in executive session.

From other sources, however, it was learned that a conference may shortly be held between a delegation of laboratory owners and representatives of the union.

This official admitted that a short time ago there was difficulty between Mix and Fox over various concessions that Mix asked but that these had all been straightened out.

Women Form League

To Encourage Americanization Through Films—Prominent People Members

The use of motion pictures for Americanization is the purpose of the National American Service League, the organization of which is announced by Mrs. Albert Henry Gleason, its associate director.

The advisory committee consists of some of the best known women in the country, including Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, wife of the Republican candidate for the Vice-Presidency Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. Finley Shepard, Mrs. Vincent Astor, Mrs Douglas Robinson and Mrs. Charles S. Whitman.

"We are uniting to enlist the men and women of this country in an effort to demand real American motion pictures," said Mrs. Gleason "Owners of motion picture theaters are willing to give the public what it wants. They would as soon show films that depict real American traditions and ideals as pictures which set forth gruesome murders. The motion picture houses can become great forces for Americanization which will do much to curb restlessness and dissatisfaction."

Patriotic films will be shown at the homes of Mrs. Shepard at Irvington and of Mrs. Astor at Rhinebeck during the coming summer.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Philadelphia.—When "The Silver Horde" played the Victoria, the lobby was transformed into a scene from the play and logs covered the ticket booth. At the entrance and exit side were huge cut-outs depicting thrilling scenes from the important points in the story. Over the electric sign hung a 30 foot salmon, while special red-ink editions of a newspaper were distributed throughout the city.

Fish in nets and aquariums were used in window displays and in sporting good stores. Ushers were dressed in keeping with the character of the story and cafes had special dishes of salmon.

In addition, book stores co-operated and the Barnum-Ringling parade as led by a large automobile with a driver dressed in furs.

Abe L. Einstein of the Stanley forces and W. J. Ferguson of the local Goldwyn exchange were responsible for the campaign.

Boston.—Life-sized photos of Eugene O'Brien, Elaine Hammerstein, Olive Thomas and Owen Moore, in front of which were piles of packages of cigarettes, placed in cigar store windows created much excitement and served to exploit Selznick productions further.

Awards were offered for the four best gusses as to the number of cigarettes contained, the prizes being $1,000 a cigar humidor, a cigarette humidor and 12 tickets to see Eugene O'Brien in "The Figurehead."

The Orpheum and Globe, playing the offering capitalized on this inexpensive publicity, for they were playing that film at the time.

Ray Studios Opened

Los Angeles.—The new Charles Ray studios at 1425 Fleming St. were officially dedicated this week. Despite labor and material handicaps the entire building was erected in three months. The stage is glass enclosed and has a novelty side arrangement that may be removed for the shooting of street scenes and interiors continuously.

scension," the refusal of landlords to rent to them and their general grouping, in the rent scheme, with babies, dogs, monkeys, parrots and other undesirables.

The other count is financial. This includes the matter of exorbitant rents to film people, unfair assessments by the county assessor and higher prices charged by Los Angeles merchants than the public pays.

On the part of the merchants and other business men present it was held that the producers have not cooperated with them.

L. J. Loeb, well known attorney, spoke on the assessment question. He said: "I do not know on what theory the county assessor makes the distinction, but it is a fact that, for purposes of taxation, he values moving picture property 5 per cent higher than that of similar articles on the shelves of Los Angeles stores.

"There have been many individual complaints on the score of prejudice against persons in the picture business. I can't vouch for these, but they have been reiterated and spread broadcast. Reports that the industry would be moved from Los Angeles to some more congenial place have arisen. I do not think this will be done, but the rumor has had its effect. A New York man commissioned me to start a business that would have involved a $500,000 investment. Soon afterwards he wired me not to do anything as he had heard that most of the big companies were going to move away from here."

R. E. Olin of the Louis B. Mayer studios objected to the assessor charging up the entire production value aaginst the roll of film produced. "A picture is made at a cost, say, of $100,000," he explained, "and the product is a roll of film. Now, this picture might be a failure or it might have cost twice as much as it should have cost through the illness of a star or other mishaps. But the assessor takes the entire cost of production as a basis for taxation. We have found, upon making elaborate comparisons, that we are taxed on cameras, electrical equipment and light machinery on 50 per cent of the book value as against a 40 per cent tax paid by merchants of the city."

Abraham Lehr, president of the M P. Producers' Association, objected strongly to the "attitude of condescension which moving picture people constantly encounter."

"Los Angeles is making it unattractive to produce pictures here," he said. "We can rent properties in New York cheaper than here. There is not enough competition to force a satisfactory situation.

"Of course there are objectionable persons in our line, but there are in every line. The difference is that a part, and not a small part, of the public classes all persons in the picture business as of the same stamp as the undesirables. I believe the newspapers could remove that prejudice by not emphasizing the peccadilloes and shortcomings of a few persons."

Charles Christie of Christie Comidies took the same view. "Dwell on the good features of the business," he exhorted. "The exaggeration and distortion of minor occurrences befalling actors and others in the public eye hurts both the industry and the city."

"It looks as if the assessor and his deputies were determined to get their pound of flesh from the picture industry," said W. S. Smith of Vitagraph. "Most of the people in this city, I am satisfied, do not know how big the industry is or how important as a factor of business. The receipts from the moving picture theaters of the city would hardly cover the cost of a single day's productions in all the plants.

"The idea is prevalent that our industry is a gold mine. As a matter of fact, it is making no more on its investment than other legitimate lines of business.

W. A. Barker of Barker Bros., replied forcibly to the charge that merchants took advantage of the producers by declaring that the fault lay with the producers themselves.

"The producers," he declared, "have failed to co-operate with the merchants. It has been three years since the Chamber of Commerce tried to get representatives of the industry together, and this is the first time we have ever had a chance to talk with you.

"It is a difficult problem to supply the picture industry. Their wants are unusual, and they always want what they want on the instant. For instance, there is a set in our store which a picture company wants, and wants right away. It is possible, and it has happened in innumerable cases, that customers have wanted the same thing. But we must move it out immediately. The next day the customer returns and finds it gone.

"Such a condition disturbs business. If the producer had come to me I could explain to him just why a certain charge was made and why it was reasonable."

Others present were W. J. Reynolds of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, Wellington Wales of the Marshall Neilan Productions, C. H. Pafenbach of the Capitol Film, W. J. Doran of the Ave Productions, Robert Brunton of the Brunton Studios, Edward Waldo of William Fox organization, Sylvester Weaver, I. H. Hellman, Louis Nordlinger, A. F. Osterloh and Sam Brehrendt.

INTERIORS ..... Suffice
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Chorus girl out of a job falls in love with baker for whom she is willing to sacrifice everything
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 4,046 feet

Those who go into a picture theater to while away an hour or two aren't going to take the time to pick the story apart so long as they get their money's worth of amusement out of it. This is just the case with "Dollars and Sense." The story is very slight and could be picked to pieces as far as plausibility and certain other angles are concerned, but despite all this, the piece will undoubtedly prove a pleasant bit of entertainment.

Made Kennedy as the chorus girl who loses her job and later is willing to sacrifice her good name to get money to save the life of her sweetheart, is an attraction all by herself. Her vivacious manner and pleasing personality help to put it over more than a little.

The idea of the girl accepting a man's money under the circumstances indicated, that she must give herself in return, may hit a little off color with some audiences, but if they withhold their criticism to the end they will probably forgive and forget any possible offense when it turns out that the moneyed man merely planned to bring the girl and her sweetheart together.

Out of a job and hungry, Hazel Farron (Madge Kennedy), stops to look in at a bakery window. She picks up a stray and hungry looking pup and marches into the shop. With the two cents that she has, she purchases four supposedly stale buns for the dog. However, Kenneth Harlan, the philanthropic baker who is poor because of his continual giving, suspects that Madge is down and out. He gives her fresh buns and when she goes to eat them, Madge finds a silver piece in each.

She returns the money and as a result gets a job in the bakery. But Harlan is shortly taken ill and there is no money to pay the hospital expenses. Madge has come to love the baker and remembering the suggestion of an acquaintance of her chorus girl days, she goes to Willard Louis for help. He gives it to her on condition that she come to his apartment at a given time, prepared to stay.

Willing to sacrifice everything for her lover's recovery, Madge carries out the arrangement as agreed. On the night she leaves for the apartment, Harlan leaves the hospital. Louis sends Harlan a note saying that he will find Madge at the designated apartment and he hastens there only to find that Louis has arranged the whole thing to bring the lovers together, and even has a minister on hand to perform the ceremony.

Will Get By As Satisfactory Entertainment If Properly Exploited

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This works out to such a satisfactory conclusion that despite what they may think of it while they are watching it, audiences will most likely pass it as satsfactory entertainment. The story end of it is slight and somewhat far-fetched even for a picture of this type but it has other good qualities that counterbalance is faults. Play up the name of Miss Kennedy and say that as the ex-chorus girl who saves her lover and his bakeshop, she will surely please.

If you go in for exploitation stunts, there should be plenty of ways to put this over. You could have the attendants garbed in baker's costumes, or another good stunt would be to use catchlines relative to the silver pieces in the buns. Also mention the fact that the story is based on Octavus Roy Cohen's Saturday Evening Post story "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 4,938 feet

Producers of two-reel slapstick comedy often discover that they have ventured beyond their legitimate depths when it comes to the production of a feature built along the same lines. Mack Sennett has discovered this in times past but with the case of "Married Life," he scores just as big a success as he has with the best of his shorter subjects. "Married Life" is great, a comedy riot that will satisfy the biggest appetites for pictures of this kind.

The framework of the picture is a melodramatic burlesque. During the unfolding of this plot there appear sequences of comedy built up to big laughs on incidents of the most inconsequential sort. But it is these incidents that make the comedy. The choice of words in the subtitles and their relation to the action is another big point in making the picture a success.

They begin by introducing Ben Turpin as Rodney St. Clair, football idol. This in itself is one of the biggest laughs of the picture. Then they work in a wonderful burlesque sequence of a football game, finally winding it up by carrying Ben off the field after the other twenty-one men have reposed on his graceful neck.

Years pass, as they say in the classics, and Ben again puts in an appearance as the leading actor in a charity play written by Phyllis Haver who is married to Jim Finlayson. Phyliss plays the lead opposite Ben and the two get away with a number of sweet osculation scenes much to the disgust of Jim, who is in the audience. Sennett's old comedy business standby, the front row spectators of the show, provide great laughs in this. Charlie Murray, Ford Sterling and Louis Fazenda lead this part of the picture.

Of course, the show is put on in a highly ludicrous way, the props are revealed to the audience and Ford gets in the limelight with a lot of jokes about the show that go over big in the subtitles.

The next sequence takes place in the hospital where Jim, the doctor, urged on by Charles Conklin, the villian, decides to let an instrument slip and take the innocent Benjamin's life. There is a hilarious sequence when Ben gets inflated with illuminating gas and floats all over the hospital corridors scaring the inmates of the alcoholic ward into more fits. They conclude in a chase that, while funny, doesn't measure up to the rest of the stuff in the picture.

It's really the remarkable comedy business and the wit of the subtitles that registers this in the same fashion as these elements register all of Mack Sennetts' stuff. You can't beat his bunch for doping out comedy incident and subtitles when they really get down to serious work (real serious work).

Turpin is a riot here. He has been handled specially well. And the rest are all fine. Its a real all-star cast in the bargain.

No Limit to the Business You Can Do On This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

At the Strand in New York, after a little extra advertising, a heavy display of Mack Sennett's name and pictures in the lobby of Ben Turpin, "Married Life" jammed the theatre at hours when it is usually only comfortably filled.

Such should be the case in all localities. A little bit of extra advertising, mention of the fact that the picture is of feature length, prominence to producer and main player and all you need to do is to wonder whether your ropes will stand the crowds and whether the lobby floor is strong enough.

If you go in for exploitation stunts, this one deserves your limit. Use the "Married Life," not a war picture" catch line. And be sure to give the rest of the cast a good display. It is made up of well known Sennett fun-makers.

A splendidly produced play with interest for all.

OUR OPINION

The name of Georges Carpentier is in itself a big selling factor when it comes to motion picture followers. But the fact that the story is a good one, has been handled in an entertaining manner, has been lavishly staged and presents the star under the most favorable conditions are points that are going to enhance the selling possibilities of the picture and give it a greater appeal to the motion picture public. The work of Georges Carpentier is surprisingly convincing when one considers it is his first appearance before the motion picture screen. There isn't a question but that his popularity as a popularist. Faire Binney picture star will be as widespread as his popularity as a motion is good in the leading feminine role and the balance of the cast is equally well selected.

DIRECTION ..... Splendid; many original touches
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good

SUPPORT ..... Mary Thurman pretty and appealing; G. Raymond Nye a suitable villian
EXTERIORS ..... Fine western shots

DETAIL ..... Good titling
CHARACTER OF STORY .. Westerner who proves his mettle and wins the girl
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 4,869 feet

Folks won't be disappointed in this latest William Hart offering. It's just what they'll expect, a virile story of the great west. It's a typical Hart picture and as such has been given a pleasing and adequate production that will surely please photoplay audiences, admirers of the star in particular. Director Hillyer has injected some clever touches that go toward making the picture worth while. Also the titling is quite appropriate and cleverly adapted to the action.

Mary Thurman makes a very attractive heroine and is very pretty. They will probably want to see her in more Hart pictures. The story, an adaptation of Russell Boggs' "Dan Kurrie's Inning," while not containing anything particularly new in the way of material or any particularly original angles, affords sufficient matter for Hart whose performance, together with good direction and a generally careful production, make up for any deficiency in the story.

Among the good touches and small bits of business that register effectively is where Hart in demonstrating his aptitude at handling a gun, shoots the dirt from under a chicken's feet causing said fowl to immediately abdicate and the following close-up of the same chicken registering indignation. This piece got a round of laughs at the Rialto.

In the opening reel, Hart steps out of his usual role and is presented as an ex-cowpuncher and railroader seeking a job as station agent in a small western town. He is assigned to take the place of Pop Young, at Condor, Young having grown old in service and no longer able to take care of the station. Bill recognizes Pop's daughter as the girl he used to ride twenty miles every day to see, some five years previous.

Bill at first refuses to take Pop's job away from him but Margaret explains that she and her father are to run Joseph Garber's general store. Garber is the "powerful factor in the district," and an admirer of Margaret. Placing her in charge of his store is part of his plan to get her for himself. When Garber discovers Bill's renewed attentions to Margaret, he plans to oust Bill from his job.

Among the day's mail is a large sum of money for Pete Beckett, a nearby ranchman and former employer of Bill's. Beckett entrusts the money to Bill overnight. The safe is blown open and Bill is confronted by Garber who demands an explanation. But hero produces the money from his pocket. He had not put it in the safe. Finally Garber works Bill out of his job and Margaret believing Bill in love with Beckett's daughter, accepts Garber's proposal. A railroad hold-up in which Hart plays the big part by arriving in time to show up Garber as the leader of the hold-up gang works up a thrilling finish. Of course hero wins the girl.

Will Be Sure to Please Picture Patrons, Star's Friends Particularly

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor.

There's little to fear regarding this getting over. It will satisfy all and should prove particularly pleasing for those who like Bill Hart and the character he represents. In "Sand" you can promise them a typical Hart picture, with the star in a truly characteristic role, that of the man of the great out-of-doors. A virile western atmosphere prevails throughout the production. Some pretty shots of western country, a thrilling hold-up in which Hart comes to the rescue at the crucial moment, a not altogether new but well handled sequence in which the political boss is "shown up," all provide worth-while bits in "Sand."

Play up the star's name and the title. For catchlines say: "When you refer to your horse in terms of endearment, be sure your sweetheart isn't around. She may not know who you are talking about. See how Bill Hart nearly loses his sweetheart in 'Sand' and you'll be sure to be careful."

Very Old Style Comedy With Star Poorly Handled

William Collier in
"THE SERVANT QUESTION"
Select Special

DIRECTOR ..... Dell Henderson
AUTHOR ..... Not credited
SCENARIO BY ..... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..... Not credited
AS A WHOLE ..... Very old style production with inadequate story idea—figuring out how to treat star proved too much for them
STORY ..... Very meagre
DIRECTION ..... Old fashioned and stilted for most part—not enough business introduced
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fair
LIGHTINGS ..... Same
CAMERA WORK ..... Medicore
STAR ..... Doesn't register as he ought to because they haven't let him have closeups
SUPPORT ..... Includes Buster Collier and renders satisfactory assistance
EXTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
INTERIORS ..... Passable
DETAIL ..... Not enough business to make up for action lapses.
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Hero assumes role of butler to capture society crooks.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,530 feet

Several very prominent elements enter to defeat "The Servant Question" in its effort to attain an average farce-comedy level. First among these is the very old style production given the picture. Practically every piece of action taking place in each set is shot from the same camera position with the exception of a few closeups. Thus the action is given a mechanical atmosphere. The camera, after all, isn't a stationary thing and can and should be moved about for different effects.

Secondly, the story material is very meagre. There is only one real situation to it and this is of one reel calibre. Surely a farce comedy of all types of pictures needs varying and generally rapid-fire situations to maintain its interest. Lack of these and the entire burden falls on the star and supporting cast.

The star in this instance is severely handicapped. Evidently the producers were afraid to bring him into a closeup very often because of lines in his face. But certainly a few marks of age would have been better, accompanied as they would have been, by William Collier's sure comedy expressions. In the full shots it is hard to catch the play of his expressions, particularly as his makeup generally photographs a blank white.

With some few exceptions, the director has failed to build up the action with any real comedy business. For the most part he has utilized conventional tricks. Collier tries a few good stunts now and again, but, as said, the effect of them is often lost because of the distance between him and the camera.

The story relates of the manner in which Larry assumed the role of butler in his pal's household in order to apprehend three society crooks who were after a valuable necklace, the possession of the said pal's sister. Most of the bids for comedy come when Larry strives to act like a butler without knowing how. There is a moderate stretch along in the middle where the laughs are pretty good.

Collier is supported by his son, "Buster," who appears as his chum, by Rapley Holmes who gets a few comedy points over, by Virginia Lee as the girl and by Armand Cortez as the villian.

Star's Name is Biggest Thing About This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

William Collier certainly has a big name as a stage comedian and there are doubtless many picture fans who never saw his first efforts on the screen and who will jump at the chance of seeing him in this. As a box office attraction it is, therefore, a bit out of the ordinary, but the type of entertainment it has to offer will lower its value considerably.

Its various faults unite to make it a pretty slow and unamusing production for the most part. There are bits of comedy that will register, but these are scattered and the general effect is rather poor.

Stress the appearance of the star in your advertising and also mention the appearance of his son. For the rest you can concentrate on the story and the appearance of a clubman as a butler, alotting it praise insofar as you think advisable under the circumstances.

One of the really big productions of the year. Bright and Spirited Farce Comedy is Wallace Reid's Latest

Wallace Reid in
"SICK ABED"
Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Sam Wood
AUTHOR .....Ethel Watts Mumford
SCENARIO BY ..... Clara Genevieve Kennedy
CAMERMAN ..... Alfred Gilks
AS A WHOLE ..... Generally very pleasing farce comedy.
STORY ..... Takes a good while establishing its premise but once into main action the laughs come fast.
DIRECTION ..... Good
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fine
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK ..... Same
STAR ..... Does very well with straight farce role.
SUPPORT ..... Very effective; headed by Bebe Daniels.
EXTERIORS ..... Most appropriate
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL ..... Some fine comedy business; much of it original.
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Complications caused by hero who feigns sickness to avoid testifying in divorce suit.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 4,327 feet

"Sick Abed" is a generally pleasing farce comedy. The fact that it consumes quite a bit of space establishing its premise is a minor fault it has in common with the majority of farces seen on either screen or stage. But naturally it takes no little manouvering to pilot a set of characters into a situation altogether unreal for the most part but which provides the desired comedy opportunities.

In the present instance they open up at a mountain resort where Reginald Jay has the misfortune to fall under the coveting eye of Mrs. Weems, a lady who believes she has a poetic nature. She begins a motion picture scenario with her hero named Hector and induces Jay to act some of it with her in the woods. A storm comes up, they are lost and take refuge in a cabin and Mrs. Weems thinks it delightful.

In the meantime John Weems, his car blocked by a falling tree, has sought the protection of a road house with a lady real estate client. From this place Jay sees them leaving. Eventually Jay escapes from Mrs. Weems. She keeps on raving about Hector and finally decides to bring a divorce against her unromantic husband, calling upon Jay as her star witness as he had seen the road house episode.

Thus Jay is obliged to feign sickness to save Weems. And here the real farce comedy opens up with a veritable battery of laughs. The rest of the picture is largely made up of farcical incidents arising from this situation and certainly the author has taken full advantage of them. In fact the last three reels of "Sick Abed" contain the kind of stuff that keeps an audience in full gales of merriment.

The romantic element is worked in via the nurse that tends Jay. The scene wherein she fools the specialist who comes to examine him by first thrusting ice and then a hot potato in his mouth while his temperature is being recorded and then kisses him when his heart is being examined, is splendid comedy in every sense of the word.

Both star and director have built up the comedy in very skillful style and once the tricky old premise is established, their work is given free play. Wallace Reid revels in this sort of picture and plays all the comedy points with authority and fine effect. Bebe Daniels, John Steppling, Tully Marshall, Winifred Greenwood, C. H. Geldart, Lucien Littlefield, Robert Bolder, Lorenza Lazzarini and George Kuwa render valuable assistance.

Will Score as Comedy Success with All Audiences

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Sick Abed" is going to appeal to all those who like snappy, brisk farce comedy and that's the same as saying that its appeal is universal. Many of the star's past pictures have catered to a single element in audiences and there may be those who are tired of seeing him always behind the wheel of a roadster. This one, however, is going to register as a hit with all the fans.

Of course handle this in a light style in your advertising. Try to get some of the comedy of the picture into your local exploitation campaign. The producers have supplied unusually good paper and ad cuts for this purpose, accessories that reflect the spirit of the subject in particularly attractive style.

Besides playing up Reid give some notice to Bebe Daniels. She has had considerable publicity of late and is going to have more when she appears as a star. Particularly if you plan playing her features this course is advisable.

Moderately Interesting Melodrama of a Drunkard and Prohibition

Tom Moore in
"THE GREAT ACCIDENT"
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR ..... Harry Beaumont
AUTHOR ..... Ben Ames Williams
SCENARIO BY ..... E. A. Bingham
CAMERAMAN ..... Norbert Brodin
AS A WHOLE ..... Moderately interesting melodrama of small town.
STORY ..... Deals with reformed drunkard and prohibition question—has novel twist at start.
DIRECTION ..... Provides a number of very human touches—generally capable.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Effective
CAMERA WORK ..... Commendable
STAR ..... Very good
SUPPORT ..... Headed by Jane Novak; includes some good character work by Andrew Robson and Willard Louis.
EXTERIORS ..... Typical small town stuff
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
DETAIL ..... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Drunkard elected mayor of town through tricky politics proceeds to clean it up.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.... About 5,613 feet

On the whole "The Great Accident," will probably go down as one of the successful Tom Moore pictures. It presents a moderately interesting melodrama of a small town, deals with the prohibition question in general, and one drunkard in particular, and embraces in its five reels some very human moments and a brace of really clever characterizations by Andrew Robson and Willard Louis.

The story has a novel twist at the very beginning when Caretall, political boss of the town, manouvers the election so that Wint Chase (Tom Moore) is elected mayor instead of his father, Winthrop Chase. Wint comes too with an awful hangover to find himself mayor of his town and, incidently, kicked out of home by his irate parent who believes that Wint had a hand in the frame-up.

Later they work in some really human scenes between father and son. Wint is drawn as a fellow guided largely by perversity. When a request is made of him he usually turns around and does just the opposite. The scene in which Wint makes up with his father is finely written and delightfully acted by Moore and Robson. In addition Harry Beaumont's direction has provided a realistic finishing touch.

Wint, with the duties of mayor upon him, starts to clean up the town and earns the enmity of the wets and drunks. They endeavor to frame him up by having a girl claim him as the father of her child. This old trick seems a bit out of place in a story containing so much good characterization as "The Great Accident" but the manner in which it has been handled tends to lessen its out-and-out sensationalism.

Of course Wint is cleared of the charge and becomes mayor once again. His romance with a childhood sweetheart ends happily.

Willard Louis's performance as Caretall is truly a fine characterization. Many directors would have made him the conventional, villainous political boss. Here, however, he is painted as a gentle sort of grafter with quite a portion of decency in him. Jane Novak is good as the girl while Ann Forrest and Philo McCullough also have prominent parts. Others are Lillian Langdon, Otto Hoffman, Roy Laidlaw, Edward McWade, Don Bailey and Lefty Flynn.

Tom Moore, himself, renders what is perhaps his best performance of recent pictures.

Ought to Go Big in the Smaller Communities

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Great Accident" will likely be a big hit in the smaller towns, specially these communities that are dry in sentiment and fact. It will get an even break in the big cities.

Besides the star's name you have the author who should by this time be considerable of a card himself, particularly for Goldwyn exhibitors as this firm has produced a number of his stories.

The twist as the opening of the picture which gives Wint the mayoralty of his town furnishes a good basis on which to build some catchy advertising. Try one of these, "He was known as the town "souse." Yet he woke up one morning and realized through a be-fuddling hang-over that he had been elected mayor on a Prohibition ticket. Pretty soft for him but—," "He was the hardest drinker in town yet they elected him instead of his sober father on a prohibition ticket. That's politics. See the outcome in—."

Beaumont has a record of producing some very human pictures. Mention his name and also give Jane Novak a play.

British Made Picture Has Interesting Settings But Very Slim Story

Marie Doro in

DIRECTOR ..... James Mc Kay
AUTHOR ..... Not credited
SCENARIO BY ..... Not credited
CAMERAMEN.....Al Moses and I. Roseman
AS A WHOLE ..... British-made production with very elemental plot and much over-acting.
STORY ..... Utilizes pre-natal influence idea and builds along very simple lines.
DIRECTION .. Allowed players to emote all over the place—no great degree of interest generated.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Average
LIGHTINGS ..... Good effects
CAMERA WORK ..... Average
STAR ..... Has type of dual character and overplays one side of it in effort for contrast.
SUPPORT ..... Headed by Godfrey Tearle; most of others over-act.
EXTERIORS ... . Undeniably English—very interesting.
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Heroine enters on wild escapades while under influence of baser self—final adventure cures her.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 5,200 feet

"Midnight Gambols" offers Marie Doro in another British made production. It contains a certain interest owing to the variety of exteriors secured for the action. Besides London Street scenes these include shots of a regular polo match underway and besides the actors and the crowds of spectators, Sir Douglas Haig is present and walks leisurely by the camera. These scenes at the polo grounds provide a fine dash of color and atmosphere.

As regards dramatic and general production value, "Midnight Gambols" is rather inadequate. In the first place, the story is strictly elemental and follows along the simplest sort of lines. The author hasn't shown any great degree of imagination but has adhered to cold facts.

The director has also allowed his players to overact. Even the star, in endeavoring to differentiate between the sides of her dual character, goes to extremes on the one hand and overplays obviously. Godfrey Tearle, English matinee idol, renders the best performance. He is skilful and his talent combined with his fine looks will probably win him many admirers here.

Because just before her birth her father had severely shocked his wife by turning thief, Irene (Marie Doro) develops a dual personality as she grows to womanhood. In the night she loses control of her good self and becomes a little vixen.

Back in her London home she meets Tom (Godfrey Tearle) and falls in love. Her flirtations anger Tom, however, and they have a little quarrel. That night Irene rises from her bed and, under the influence of her midnight gamboling self meets a wicked man-about-town who lures her to a locked dining room in Chinatown. But the villain's castoff tells the tale to Tom and he rescues her. The shock of the villain's attack has caused Irene to become seriously ill but on her recovery the doctor pronounces her cured for ever of her dual personality.

Play Up Star and Godfrey Tearle

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Marie Doro in
"MIDNIGHT GAMBOLS"
Pioneer

You ought to be able to attract business on this by advertising the star heavily and stating that the production was made in England where Godfrey Tearle, the British matinee idol was secured as leading man. Mention of his relationship to Conway Tearle, his half-brother, will further arouse curiosity. And certainly Godfrey will attract a good bit of attention from the feminine portion of the audience.

The picture as a whole doesn't rank very high but at the same time its exteriors, particularly the polo match shots are going to carry it to some extent. The story is altogether too simple in character to be picturized in feature length but while it never generates any great dramatic interest it is by no means dull. There is also a pretty good comedy sequence in the boarding school while the love scenes between the two leads are laid in very pretty exterior scenes, something of a relief from Hollywood and environs.

CHARACTER OF STORY .... Fully implied by the title.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 6,000 feet

Inasmuch as "The Discarded Woman" is not up to the standard of the average feature production of the present time, it contains an element of appeal especially suited to a certain type of audience—those not educated to the better things in picture stories and those who don't stop to consider production values as long as the picture contains plenty of action with much plot.

Its biggest fault is the story. Folks have come to expect and want good stories. There will be a good many objections to the situation which has the heroine, the discarded wife, marry another man before her child is born and allow him to believe himself the father of her child. For the most part the plot development is mechanical and convenient but this is just the sort of thing that goes best with certain audiences in the smaller town houses.

The director has worked it out to a logical conclusion and it is easy to follow throughout. The production does not evidence any particular expense but this is wise because the story doesn't warrant it. At all times the production is in keeping with the material they had to work with.

Martin Wells tires of his wife Esther and finally deserts her by putting her on a train and leaving before the train pulls out. A conductor gives her the note which tells her that she is "discarded." Desperate, she leaves the train when it stops for orders. She wanders to the cabin of Samuel Radburn, a fortune hunter who has been swindled out of a mine.

Radburn returns to his cabin after winning considerable money. He attacks Esther but the effects of much liquor put him to sleep. Esther helps herself to $200 and departs leaving a note saying she will repay it. Later Radburn returns to New York after killing Wells, the man who robbed him of his mine. Before he dies, Wells makes Radburn promise to search for his discarded wife Esther, and give her a share of the mine. In New York Radburn comes upon Esther but doesn't know she is Wells' wife as well as the girl who visited his cabin.

Believing himself responsible for the child which is about to be born Radburn marries Esther. They are very happy until the "Graeber gang," enemies of Radburn, seeks to get certain papers by threatening Esther with disclosing her secret to her husband. In the end the papers are saved and Esther forgiven. Rod La Rocque as Radburn gives a splendid performance.

Appeal To The Class That Like This Type Of Entertainment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are catering to a class of people who want only the best to be had in picture offerings, it would not be well to invite them to see "The Discarded Woman," not because of the production itself but because of the story and the rather delicate situation put forth in one sequence. It certainly isn't for children and if you cater to a family trade, you will probably receive kicks if you show them this. On the other hand if you cater more to the transient crowd, you will most likely find "The Discarded Woman" a first class attraction.

And at that there will always be those who enjoy this sort of picture. Make your appeal to this crowd and direct your exploitation along the lines suggested by the title. It suggests the theme of the picture quite clearly and you will find by playing it up, a good many will come out of curiosity, if nothing else.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 4,455 feet

"The Girl in the Rain," doesn't hit it off with the average run of features. Its appeal is limited almost wholly to those audiences of the smaller theaters who are not educated up to the best there is in pictures today and who enjoy a story that employs a lot of old and rather crude melodramatic tricks to keep it going.

The story is the picture's weakest point. It is a terribly convenient melodrama in which a touch of mystery is striven for but which is in evidence only in the first sequence and this because the characters are brought on the screen without the usual introductory subtitles. But throughout the picture's length things happen in such an all-fired convenient fashion that the interest is severly handicapped. Furthermore the subtitles have the annoying habit of anticipating much of the action.

The opening scenes introduce three fugitives, Judith, Walter and Vera, who put up at a country hotel. Their relation to one another is not explained although it is hinted that Judith and Walter are married. Judith goes for a ride, fords a small river but on a little island is caught in a downpour of rain. She is thrown from her horse and sustains a fractured ankle. Boone Pendleton comes to her rescue and they are obliged to spend nearly a week in his cabin on the island as the river has become impassable.

Boone falls in love with Judith and proposes but because of her plight she refuses. In the meantime Walter and Vera have been arrested. Detectives come for Judith after the storm but she makes her escape and aids Walter and Vera in breaking jail. The rest of the picture narrows down to two chases, the detectives after the escaped prisoners and Boone after Judith. In the end it develops that Walter and Vera are married and that Judith is Walter's sister. Walter had stolen bonds to pay up gambling debts but it was a first offense and so he is let off after the bonds have been returned. And there is nothing between Judith and Boone.

Title and Story Arguments are Only Bets On This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Anne Cornwall in
"THE GIRL IN THE RAIN"
Universal

This is really one of the weaker features. Endowed with a very good production it has a hard time of it standing because of its poor story. Probably exhibitors operating small houses and catering to a clientele that hasn't learned descrimination will find it getting over fairly well. First class audiences will probably laugh at it more than once.

As regards drawing power the feature doesn't boast of anything in this line either. Miss Cornwall, as yet, has no following and she hasn't received the kind of treatment needed to bring out her ability.

Concentrate on story arguments and give the title a good play for it has an air of mystery about it.

Fine Comedy and Human Interest Story After Very Poor First Reel

Zasu Pitts in
"HEART OF TWENTY"
Brentwood-Robertson-Cole

DIRECTOR ..... Henry Kolker
AUTHOR .....Sarah Y. Mason
SCENARIO BY..... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..... John Leezer
AS A WHOLE.....Good comedy and human interest production after very slow and tiresome first reel.
STORY.....Good small town stuff
DIRECTION.....Entirely too many closeups of star in first reel; comedy and human interest points well brought out.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Good to only fair in some exteriors.
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK .....All right
STAR.....Hasn't dominant personality but handles herself well when not handicapped by superfluous closeups.
SUPPORT.....Percy Challenger registers finely in character part.
EXTERIORS ..... Realistic
INTERIORS ..... Same
DETAIL.....Very good touches in bringing out comedy of story.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Unattractive girl finds happiness by thinking of others and not of her own troubles.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

After an exceedingly tiresome first reel "Heart of Twenty" develops into a most enjoyable picture dominated by a lot of small town comedy incident and some real human interest action. At the start the director has catered altogether too much to the star, awarding her closeup after closeup for no particular reason at all. Also a number of the early sequences are padded all out of shape and the general effect of all this is pretty tiring.

These first bad innings over the picture picks up marvelously well and hits a stride that will really "get" to the heart of the majority of fans.

The scenes concerning the electioneering for Higgenbotham by his family of five kids and the heroine will most certainly register as sure-fire stuff. They've put a lot of wonderful detail in these sequences. The scenes where the heroine rehearses the old man for his public speeches with an audience of sleepy kids and dolls touch a fine comedy vein. Then the sequence in the public hall where Higgenbotham is getting the worst of it from his opponent, strikes a human interest note that is fairly resounding.

The story has to do with Katie, a rather homely girl, who thinks so much of herself that she becomes despondent. A burlesque effort at suicide is halted by a good looking young man who tells her to think about others. Thus it is that Katie completely reforms and takes a bright outlook on life. Higgenbotham, an old clerk in the town's largest factory, resigns when he suspects the new manager, Wiseman, of stealing automobiles for rebuilding in one of the shops.

Wiseman comes out for mayor and at Katie's suggestion Higgenbotham starts campaigning against him. In the meantime the good-looking young man has taken a job in the factory and just as Higgenbotham is getting the worst of it in a public debate, the young hero comes in with evidence sufficient to put Wiseman back of the bars.

The outstanding performance of the picture is that rendered by Percy Challenger as Higgenbotham. His is a delightful piece of character work, human to the core. And he knows how to get his comedy over without forcing it. Zasu Pitts goes along very well when not burdened by the close-ups of the first reel. She, too, has a sense of comedy, but contrast is needed to bring it out. Others who appear are Aileen Manning, Billie Dale, Tom Gallery and Jack Pratt.

No Reason Why This Couldn't Be Improved

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This one certainly develops into a good picture after a bad first reel. Probably this fault can be benefited by the producers. Many of those unnecessary closeups could come right out without any trouble at all. This done, with some of the padding also removed, "Heart of Twenty" could be advertised as a fine comedy of small town life with a lot of human interest tucked away in the laughs and practically all audiences would agree on the point.

Pictures of this type usually get over in a big way. Many of Charles Ray's biggest successes have contained an atmosphere almost identical with this. Directors seem to be able to picture small town life more realistically than they can big city life. So play it up big from this angle, dwell on the comedy and the human interest action and the rather funny election stuff. Take out the bad spots at the start, get the crowds in and they surely will be well enterained.

Some Short Reels

"Jiggs and the Social Lion"—Pathe

In few respects does this issue of the "Bringing Up Father" series differ from the offerings that have preceded it. The same principal characters, the same underlying thought, similar if not the same sets and a production that generally resembles the others has been turned out. There are few bits in it that are unusual in films, the slapstick material certainly being antiquated in most cases. As far as the actual story is concerned, there is so little of that, that this is forced to depend upon its knockabout tricks to get it over. Audiences, however, have seen so many riotous pictures that stuff of that type no longer causes them to get into ecstacies unless it is of unsual quality. And that employed here hardly is up to such a standard. Undoubtedly, the production as a whole is good to look at. The technical end of it has certainly been taken care of in fine fashion. The photography and lighting are splendid; the sets elaborate. The characters have been patterned carefully after those originated by McMannus, Johnny Ray who is featured is inclined at times to overact, while Margaret Fitzroy also displays this tendency although to a lesser degree. Laura La Plante as their daughter is natural and attractive, in a small role while Ward Caulfied delineates Monohan well. The breaking of crockery, gymnasium scene and those at the reception show little that is really new. Margaret Fitzroy's manipulating of the lion is the big laugh in the piece.

"Start the Show"—Pathe

Moving along at a rapid pace, this single reeler is not made monotonous, but on the other hand, it has too few legitimate laughs to get it over with much to spare. Is a Rolin production, with Beatrice La Plante playing the featured role and is set in a rural district. With one or two gags of especial merit inserted, this could have been made a satisfactory reel, but as it is, while there are several scenes that will amuse, this lacks the necessary "big laughs." They started out after a while to satirize a stock company's performance, but did not stick to it long enough to get the laughs, stuff of that sort affords in spite of its having been used on numerous occasions. As a whole, a fair offering for the crowd that likes slapstick.

Another Bray Comic—Goldwyn

Judge Rummy, Tad's caricature creation, occupies the position of prominence in the cartoon which makes up the opening part of this Bray Comic. It has been given the title, "Doctors Should Have Patience," which to begin with, does not sound well as such and is built about an ancient pun. The material making up the cartoon is not particularly funny, neither the theme nor the bits of business comprising it being of more than ordinary quality. About a dozen remarks clipped from different publications make up the Lampoon portion, and as usual, the topics selected as sources of humor are not all novel. About four of these will cause titters in the average house.

"The Aero-Nut"—Warner Bros

In spite of the fact that throughout this two reel knockabout comedy in which Al St. John occupies the stellar role, there is a lack of original bits of business of the comedy variety, it is considerably above the average short reel production. The photography and camera work are of merit and what puts it over is the acrobatic work of the principal. There is one portion where St. John performs several feats on a flag-pole that thrill and there is also much creditable aeroplane stuff photographed commendably. Bathing damsels occupy a good part of the footage. St. John incidentally, displays a likeable personality and with the proper sort of material should ultimately take his place with the better of the two reel comedy stars.

Bray Pictograph, No. 443—Goldwyn

Music and its effects upon various animals has frequently been the subject of conjecture and now a Brooklyn professor, Bachenburg by name, is trying to teach a dog to play the piano. They have photographed the scene of a lesson nicely, the spectacle of the canine attempting to pound the ivories properly, with the shot of a number of kiddies dancing about to the tune being one that appeals. W. F. Leventhal explains thoroughly the function of breathing, elaborating more on the purpose of the process than on the actual manner in which it is performed. A number of finely executed diagrams, explain it all nicely, although much of it is rather elementary as is the case with other Leventhal subjects. Jerry in another of his cartoons, directed by Vernon Stallings, and called "A Punk Piper," amuses, the idea and its execution being highly commendable.

"His Mis-Step"—Universal

Only recently, another organization issued a single reeler which was very much similar to this one, varying only in a few details. Ben Cohen is the author of this which has an acceptable plot and a few situations of merit. It concerns a youthful college graduate who is informed just before departure for home that his father has married again and that his mother will see that he catches his step. He returns and mistakes one of his new mother's daughters for the new parent which leads to most of the comedy. Of course, the girl decides to continue the deception which ultimately causes considerable trouble. Finally he decides that the young lady is more desirable as a sweetheart than as a mother and there is the usual clinch fade-out after all straightened out. None of the members of the cast are credited.

"Through Life"—Universal

Confusing in more than one spot and generally lacking in humorous incidents and a really novel plot, this fails to register in satisfactory style. It concerns three wedded couples, two young and one inclined towards middle age. A grand mix-up is caused when the female member of one of the little families is invited to share the suite of one of the other husbands. Gossip results and then an irate husband appears upon the scene with everything being cleared in a commonplace manner at the finish. There is little to recomend this, which is at the best a very ordinary one reel production.

"Footprints"—Vitagraph

This comedy will certainly get over big due the wonderful acrobatics displayed by Joe Rock, featured, and practically all his supporting cast, combined with some excellent cutting which serves to accentuate the thrills. The slight plot concerns the kidnapping of a bride by a disgruntled suitor. The wedding party sends for a detective and this is where Joe Rock makes his entrance. The business he pulls as the amateur detective, wherein he is again assisted by tricks of the camera, is bound to get over because of its utter ridiculousness and the serious manner in which he works it. When Joe starts in fighting the gang of bandits the thrills and acrobatics start and keep right on going until the end. There isn't the slightest let down in the action and the thrills pile on one another in rapid succession and are well commingled with laughs. All in all a real comedy hit.

Short Reels

"Tit for Tat"—Hall Room Boys Photoplays

For the first time in quite a while if not the first time entirely, they have done away with the hall room business in these offerings, that is, the stuff that takes place in the abode of Percy and Ferdie, the four-flushing youths. The injection of some more slapstick at the conclusion, a commendable story with several excellent gags and the otherwise amusing production given this, has made it a highly satisfactory comedy. It finds Neeley Edwards and Hugh Fay being discharged rather rudely. The manner in which they secure meals when bereft of capital, their flirtations with the wealthy and light-hearted Miss Millionbucks, the scheme which finds one of the duo receiving a reward while the other is placed in jail, all serve to put this over. Harry Williams wrote the story for the two reeler and directed it, turning out an unusually good comedy, while Harry Cohn has also seen to it that his name appears on one of the captions as supervisor.

"Screen Snapshots," No. 2—Jack Cohn—State Rights

When the exhibitor promises the fan a peep into the private and professional lives of screen celebrities, Mr. Fan is naturally thrilled and made expectant. The average picture patron is usually if not always curious to know the inside information about the stars and when Jack Cohn in an altruistic moment conceived the idea of carrying out this scheme of letting 'em in on it, he evidently knew what he was about. "Think of it," writes Cohn, sixteen stars in one reel. If you don't believe it look at it!" And he's right. Catherine Calvert, Herbert Rawlinson, Director Horan, Priscilla Dean, Hope Hampton, Lou Tellegen, Geraldine Farrar, Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, Anita Stewart, Charles Ray, Florence Vidor, Howard Hickman, Bessie Barriscale and others all smile, look pretty or indulge in the delicate procedure of kissing, which is probably more enjoyable. This is a good fan offering having been titled in good style and will in all probability please.

"Circulation of the Blood"—Scientific Film Corp

When blood corpuscles and cells can be reproduced upon the screen in sizes varying from 30,000 to several million times their natural dimensions, the scientific value of films is established more firmly than ever. In many respects, this reel is remarkable. Although rather elementary, it has much that is of interest to those who desire the information offered. There is some question, however, as to its value as theater entertainment. It was presented at the Rialto last week and certainly seemed out of place. Medical students and others who care to go into details about the subject will find this helpful. On the other hand, the fact that the heart pumps blood through the body, that the arteries carry oxygenized blood, that the veins carry the impure blood and the capillaries are the connecting links, are generally known so that even as a source of added knowledge, this will fall short in many instances.

"Won By a Nose"—Universal

Charles Dorety, the only credited member of the cast, occupies the center of the screen almost throughout the two reels comprising this offering. F. Windemere directed it and while in a few places, this is clever enough to provoke some mirth, most of it is not sufficiently above the commonplace, to insure success before a sophisticated crowd. What will probably get the biggest laugh in the piece, a gag which incidentally will meet with objections, is almost identical with one used in a comedy seen on Broadway a few months ago. The manner in which it is brought out differs a trifle from the other, but not very much. There are some good shots of a horse race that portion especially being well photographed. The culmination, however, is somewhat incomplete for they permitted the heroine to remain in the villain's clutches. As a whole, a comedy that is a bit better than fair.

Bray Pictograph, No. 442—Goldwyn

Max Fleischer's "Out of the Inkwell" cartoon which closes this Bray reel is the brightest spot in it. Three portions make it up, the first being devoted to the work of a large excavating shovel and the second to Maurice Maeterlinck. Everyone has seen the steam shovel at work so that the initial section is hardly likely to create an unusual amount of interest. Maeterlinck, on the other hand, is an unusually prominent figure and the scenes in which the poet, dramatist and philosopher is seen can be depended upon to hold attention. Fleischer's little clown is sure to provoke much laughter in the cartoon appended. This incidentally represents the height of elaborateness to which the animated caricature has been developed. The figure is seen manipulating a Ouija Board, parading about among the fixtures and doing other little tricks, the reproduction of which must have required a considerable amount of care. It is a credit to Fleischer and the Bray organization.

"A Fresh Start"—Educational

Educational is turning out a series of Mermaid comedies, the brand name of which suggests that there is to be much beach stuff in evidence. Marvel Rea, however, is the only member of the cast who bears any resemblance at all to a mermaid and even she does not frolic about very much in negligee, except in the restaurant scene. Jimmy Adams, Lige Cronley and Frank Coleman are the three other prominent members of the cast and Jack White directed this knockabout offering. No one is credited with writing the story for the simple reason, in all probability, that there was no story. Throughout, the characters chase one another, hurl pies, tumble and roll about, find themselves being catapaulted through the air by various means and otherwise engage in a conglomeration of slapstick stunts, few of which are really new. Of course, there is a market for material of this type and undoubtedly there will be more than one house that will book this and please its patrons. Where audiences are discriminating, however, and know what deserves to pass, this will not receive a rousing reception.

"How Flowers Grow"—Mentor

Hand-colored in some cases and tinted in others, the shots making up the first of the two parts which comprise this offering all hold attention. They have reproduced upon the screen the manner in which leaves and flower buds develop, showing the unfolding and rapidly developing bits of vegetation. The growth of the arum lily, aralia, nasturtium and other flowers is taken up in an interesting and fascinating manner, the technical end of this having also been well taken care of. Following the flower section is a portion devoted to scenes taken in the Sierra Nevadas, Spain. While some of the stuff is rather dull, much of it is highly creditable, and with the unusual first part, this reel is practically sure to get over almost anywhere.

"The Great Mystery"—Fox

Most of the laughs in this Mutt and Jeff cartoon come in the early portion, and although the latter part is not quite as clever as that which comes before it, the comedy towards the beginning should be enough to put this over. In this, Mutt is a detective and the scene in which he displays the various disguises, only to have it all turn out to be a hoax will get a smile from almost anyone. Thereafter, the manner in which Jeff is attempting to solve the mystery himself, the scene in which the trouble is described and others all serve to keep this going in good style. There are some clever bits of animation and as a whole, this is up to the usual standard set in these productions.

"Solid Concrete"—Vitagraph

Instead of depending upon novel tricks and bits of business, this latest Larry Semon two reeler holds up only because of a number of thrills, photographed in remarkable fashion. In addition to Semon, Frank Alexander, William Hauber and Lucille Carlisle are prominent in the offering. Many of the old stunts included in the collection of almost every knockabout comedy producer are included in this, but they have been screened so well that this will get over, in spite of its lack of real humor. Most of it takes place near a large rock-crushing plant or some such structure, with its trestles, cars, pulleys, high scaffoldings and other edifices. Semon and the others run over it, are daubed plentifully with semi-liquids, tumble, roll about, fall and perform almost everything else that one expects to see in a riotous comedy as well as a few feats one does not expect to find. It's exicting and while not nearly as funny as the better productions turned out by the irrepressible Larry, has a number of whirlwind sections to overcome that deficiency.

Says S. A. Lynch Has Bought Into Saenger—No Changes Contemplated

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Atlantic City, N. J.—E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Co. of New Orleans yesterday confirmed the reports published in various New York trade journals that S. A. Lynch of Atlanta had bought an interest in his company.

"S. A. Lynch has purchased the Saenger Amusement Co. stock formerly held by Herman Fichtenberg," said Mr. Richards. This will have no effect whatever on the policy of Saenger Amusement.

"Any further statement in connection with what Mr. Lynch's intentions are in owning this stock would necessarily have to come from him or from Mr. Freeman, his general manager.

Richards is here for a rest.

(By wire to WID'S DAILY)

Atlanta—S. A. Lynch and Y. F. Freeman of S. A. Lynch Enterprises are out of the city and in their absence no one at the Lynch offices will discuss the plans of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises Finance Corp. formed in Delaware last week with a $10,000,000 capital or the buying into the Saenger Amusement Co.

At First National on Saturday, it was stated that purchase of a block of stock in the Saenger Amusement Co. by S. A. Lynch who is commonly reported as being a Famous Players ally would in no way affect First National in as much as the Saenger theatrical and First National interests are separate and distinct.

It was again pointed out that any change in First National franchises must be approved by the full membership of the circuit.

Let More Franchises

At a meeting of the executive committee of Associated First National held in New York last week it develops that about 1,000 franchises were submitted and approved by the committee composed of Nathan Gordon, Moe Mark and Harry Schwalbe.

First National a few weeks ago announced the granting of 1,100 odd franchises. Since that time it is said about three hundred more have been approved and with the new batch the total is therefore said to be in the neighborhood of 2,500.

Reported Eastman's Weekly Output of Raw Stock Will Be Printed in His Own Laboratories

A common topic now being discussed in laboratory circles around New York is the report, believed to be an authentic one, that Eastman Kodak will in six months have sufficient laboratory facilities to print practically the entire amount of raw stock it turns out weekly.

Eastman, it is estimated by well informed persons, manufactures 12,500,000 feet of raw stock weekly. The reported laboratory move will follow these lines, if it proves to be true:

Jules E. Brulatour, the distributor of Eastman stock in New York, is said to have a large interest in a Fort Lee laboratory which is one of the largest in the East. Immediately in the rear of this plant is another laboratory which is now under construction and which will be finished in a few months.

In Long Island City, Brulatour interests are understood to be financing the erection of a third laboratory which will be finished in about four months.

These plants when finished and in full working swing, together with the third plant now turning out about 2,000,000 feet per week, will be able to take care of almost the entire output of raw stock of the Eastman plants. Laboratory men point out that the three plants can turn out about 9,000,000 or 10,000,000 feet per week and that with a force working overtime the "labs" will equal the

Film Rights Jump

The article said in part:

"About a year ago they (the prices) had reached the stage when $50,000 was being offered for some of the most successful of the season's plays, but today $50,000 is anything but an exceptional price. A week ago it was recorded in these columns that $110,000 had been refused for the motion picture rights to 'The Storm,' but there are half a dozen or more instances where even that figure has been beaten.

"According to those who are in position to know, a bona fide offer of $250,000 has been received for the film rights to 'East is West.' The offer was rejected—not necessarily because the amount was considered too low, but because the producer of 'East is West' is beginning to hope that that play will duplicate the career of 'The Bird of Paradise,' which is at present in its ninth or tenth year. Incidentally, 'The Bird of Paradise' will undoubtedly bring several hundred thousand dollars for pictures, for it is a piece known up and down the whole country, and now in England as well.

"For 'Lightnin',' finishing its second year in New York, the movie men have offered $200,000, but it has not yet been accepted. The part of 'Lightnin'' which will eventually reach the screen—to wit, the story—is ordinary at best; the play has made its success on the characterization of the leading role. But when they buy a successful play, the picture men seem to consider the story last of all. '39 East' with a mere shell of a story, brought $5,000 for pictures, but it was the title for which the $45,000 was paid.

"Following a season's run in New York, $100,000 has been offered for the film rights to this piece ('Clarence'), although the story of the plan amounts to nothing, and there is no reason to believe that it will make a good picture.

"Apparently a season's run in New York automatically makes a play worth about $100,000 to the film producers. Douglas Fairbanks has offered $125,000 for the rights to 'A Tailor-Made Man,' and the rotund Mr. Arbuckle is willing to pay $75,000 for 'As You Were,' a musical comedy. Neither of these offers has been accepted as yet.

"The shallowest failure is worth thousands of dollars these days—'Curiosity,' which lasted a few weeks at the Greenwich Village this last season, sold to the films for $17,000, and 'Oh, Henry!' is said to have brought $6,000.

"When 'Within the Law' brought $50,000 nearly two years ago, that figure was considered sensational. But $75,000 has now been offered for 'Friendly Enemies,' and its producer is holding out for $100,000.

"According to the standard form of authors' contract, all money received for motion picture rights is divided equally between producer and playwright. It was once reported that the playwrights were about to agitate for a larger percentage, but it was eventually decided that the fifty-fifty division was eminently fair, since the producer, by risking his money, did his share to popularize the play and was accordingly entitled to an equal share of the proceeds. Nearly always, when there are two or more authors, they divide only 50 per cent. of the picture money, but there are some exceptions to this rule. Wilson Collison, when he was persuaded to take a collaborator for 'Up in Mabel's Room' and 'The Girl in the Limousine,' was offered a full third of the film money in compensation therefor. These two plays have not as yet been sold for pictures, but Mr. Collison has placed a value of $20,000 upon his interest in each, which would bring the price of each of the plays to $60,000.

"A new practice which has latterly sprung up in the picture game has already led to a change in some playwrights' contracts, and will probably lead to others. This particular practice is the making of a play into a second film after a lapse of years, generally by a new company, which has bought the film rights from the concern which made the original picture. A recent example of this has been 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,' which Metro has just released as a film after purchasing the rights from the company which had made the story into a picture years ago. In this case, of course, the first purchaser was the big winner, and to guard against this many playwrights are now stipulating that the film rights to their plays shall not be sold outright, but shall be leased for a period of five years, after which they shall revert to the playwright and the original producer of the play.

"When the production of a play is financed by a film company with the picture rights in view, as has become the fashion recently, the picture company generally agrees in advance of production upon the amount to be paid for the film rights. Sometimes, however, the contract is closed under an optional agreement, which throws the rights into the open market. Something of this kind seems to be happening in the case of 'The Storm,' for there is no doubt that the production of that play was largely financed by the Famous Players. Now the rights are being bid for, and should the Famous Players be outbid they will be reimbursed for all money expended upon the production.

"The recent agitation of the playwrights for a standard contract, stipulating the precise manner in which the film rights to a play may be disposed of, grew out of a feeling that the more shrewd of the managers were occasionally getting the better of the unsophisticated author."

There has been nothing definite stated that would give the reported move an official status, but those "in the know" are quite sure that plans are now being rapidly completed which would make Eastman a power to be reckoned within the laboratory field.

The Sun and Herald says of "The Slim Princess":

"Miss Normand's playing is one of the most diverting things she has done, assisted by Hugh Thompson, Tully Marshall and exotic settings that are as good as a Cook's tour through the Orient."

Goldwyn

At Broadway Theaters

Strand

Mary Pickford is attracting large audiences this week despite the warm weather even though "Suds" her latest production, is sending them away somewhat disappointed. "Suds" is a poor follow-up for "Pollyanna." The overture is "Henry VIII Dances," followed up by a Chester Scenic, "When Dreams Come True," scenes showing the Great War of China. The topical review contains nothing unusual except the cartoon and the trick photography bit called "The Shimmy Epidemic," which afforded considerable amusement. Harry Allen sings a Mother's Street Song. A street song appropriate to the atmosphere of "Suds" is used.

After the feature Estelle Carey sings "Because of You" and "I Pass by Your Window." The comedy is a "Fresh Start." The organ solo concluded.

Rivoli

Barring the Charles Ray feature the bill at the Rivoli this week has a decidedly Spanish flavor, evidencing itself in the first four numbers on the program. The overture is Chabrier's "Espana" and this is followed by some old hand-colored scenes of Spain. No. 3 is a scene with song and dance entitled, "In Granada." The scene is full of color, the singing stirring and typical and the dancing with castanets finishes off the picture prettily.

The first item in the pictorial is a scene of the city of Madrid during the recent strike demonstrations. After this the weekly switches into various pictures of interest, not the least of which are more cartoons from Marcus and a new Mutt and Jeff number, "The Great Mystery." A novelty is "Swing Song," rendered by Miss Turk Rohn from a swing of electric lights and flowers before a pretty cloud effect backdrop. "Homer Comes Home" registers in typical Charles Ray fashion and the Sunshine comedy, "The Jazz Bandits," that follows scores with its varieties of foolishness. The organ solo is the "Vox Humana Chorus."

Rialto

Mary Miles Minter headlines at the Rialto this week in the Realart picture, "Jenny Be Good." A good touch of staging is in evidence in the number immediately preceding the feature, the popular "Somewhere a Voice is Calling," sung by Gladys Rice. This is appropriate to the feature and creates the proper atmosphere. The "Mignon Overture" opens the bill and the magazine follows with its varying pictures of news value and permanent interest. The song and the feature follow in order.

Number 5 is perhaps the real high light of the bill. The orchestra renders selections from Hugo Reisenfeld's musical comedy, "Betty, Be Good," and the interest these numbers awaken is marked. The similarity of the titles of the picture and the musical comedy also arouse no little comment. The playing of the music during the week seems another fine stroke of showmanship. The Mack Sennett comedy, "You Wouldn't Believe It," registered very well, while the organ solo is Hollins' "Concert Overture in C Major."

Broadway

Victor Kremer's re-issue of Charles Chaplin's burlesque on "Carmen" is being featured at this house this week, with Metro's production of "Burning Daylight," the Jack London story featuring Mitchell Lewis, holding down second place in the billing. The double attraction or triple attraction, for there is also a musical act called "Midnight Rollickers," is serving to keep the house well filled. As usual, the Topical Review is offered as well as "Topics of the Day." Selections from "Carmen" comprise the overture, with the usual organ solo winding up the program. "The End of a Perfect Day" is being rendered on the organ this week.

Capitol

S. L. Rothapfel has again arranged a program slightly out of the ordinary at the Capitol. The overture is combined with singing by the Capitol ensemble and ballet dancing. Selections from "La Giconda" are rendered, the first part including the finale of Act 3 utilizing the chorus, the second part "The Dance of the Hours" bringing the ballet into play. The dances are rendered before a typically soft and well lighted Wenger setting. "Outlaws of the Wilderness," a Robertson-Cole scenic, next position and seems to register even though it was shown for a week Broadway before. Saint-Saens, "The S is rendered by a ballet dancer, Mlle. barelli, this number registering excell The ensemble is used at the opening news reels, rendering "Smiles.' Durin scenes showing the Harvard reunio graduates, "Fair Harvard" is given. Oriental Chant" precedes the feature being given by George Allen who is in the center of a hazey, oriental appe background. Mabel Normand in "The Princess" follows. The ensemble is again at the star's entrance when a bars of "Peekaboo" are given. "Darden is also sung during the picture's run. lections from Victor Herbert's "N " follow and then comes Vouldn't Believe It."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

The publicity department of Famous Players has effected a tie-up with The Osborne Company of Newark, N. J., manufacturers of art calendars, on a series of calendars carrying portraits of stars.

Each calendar, printed in full colors and covering the year 1921, contains the portrait of a popular actress. Twelve different sets of the calendars were made and of the twelve, nine contained Paramount stars or players, among them being Elsie Ferguson, Ethel Clayton, Irene Castle, Billie Burke, Dorothy Dalton and Marion Davies.

It is estimated 3,000,000 of these calendars will be sold throughout the country.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The owner of a local neighborhood house recently put over a stunt that caused the newspapers to give an unusual amount of space to his theater.

He decided to install a cooling system in his house and although it was unnecessary, demanded that the street be closed. Upon being refused a permit, he applied for a writ of mandamus to compel the issuance of the permit. A trip to court reporters, and the hearing received big space. Everyone received the impression that the manager was doing all he could be his patrons and the house received much boosting. Charges of discrimination etc., kept the newspaper boys busy rushing copy through and the theater capitalized. The court finally ordering a limited permit.

Dallas—Herschel Stuart, manager of the Hulsey-Lynch interests, is right up to the minute in securing a toe-hold on a good thing.

Recently the Dallas Times Herald, an afternoon newspaper, staged a baby show, which proved to be a big hit among the mother and parents of the kiddies in Dallas. A gold medal was presented to each of the three winners, and the show was a town topic, as practically every baby in the city was entered in the show.

Stuart, ever on the alert, hit upon the bright idea of filming the kiddies, and running the picture at the Queen. Not only did the picture draw crowds of proud papas and mamas to the show, but the Herald carried a page one story each day telling their patrons that the Baby Show winners were being shown at the Queen. Hence, Stuart not only got a lot of free advertising, but a crowded house.

Launching a Baby Show ought to be a simple matter in any enterprising city, and it goes big.

Radin has finished "Man and Woman," which they are offering to state right buyers.
